CONCERNING BOTULINUS POISONING.

The January number of the Pure Food Bulletin contained an account of the ripe olive investigation due to the death from botulinus poisoning of several persons in various sections of the United States. Since that time public interest in this singular and deadly outbreak has been renewed by the death of other men and women from the same poison. That is to say the fatal poison has developed in olives chiefly, but it has appeared in other vegetable or fruits also. One of the singularities of the more recent outbreak is that botulinus occurs quite as frequently in home-prepared products as in those prepared by the processes and methods of the factory. It has been detected in string beans, in California ripe olives and in various other products in other states.

It is interesting to note that botulinus poisoning has never yet been detected in green olives. They get soft and rot just the same as the ripe product, but there has never yet been discovered the slightest trace of this active and deadly foe of the human race among them. It is worthy of note that green olives are put up in a strong salt solution. The result of investigations conducted by the Bureau of Foods shows that the salt solution in which green olives are immersed varies from $7\frac{1}{2}$ to 9 per cent. Thus they are sold to the consuming public. The salt solution in which ripe olives are put up for commercial purposes varies from 1.75 to 4 per cent., the average salt solution for ripe olives being less than 3 per cent.

The Bulletin contends that the weak salt solution used in packing ripe olives is the cause of the development of botulinus as it evidently will not develop either in vegetables or fruits packed in a strong salt solution of about 8 per cent. This theory is based upon the fact that ripe olives have been for years imported from Italy, France and other European countries without the slightest trace of poison occurring. They came over here in large quantities, invariably packed in a 20 per cent. salt solution. They are then repacked in small containers with an 8 or 9 per cent. salt solution. The Bulletin has no knowledge that botulinus has ever been detected in imported ripe olives. All the information we have is to the effect that nothing of the sort has ever occurred. If this is correct, as we believe it is, then a strong salt solution will solve the problem and make an end of very serious trouble.

We are of the opinion that the authorities would be justified in putting an embargo upon all ripe olives until it is satisfied that the packers have adopted such precautions as will satisfy every reasonable demand. This thing is too serious a menace to life to permit of weak or temporizing methods. A mere taste of the poison is often sufficient to end the life of the victim. The American Food Journal contains an article by Walter L. Dodd, which is full of valuable instruction. It warns the housewife as well as advises the doctor concerning the symptoms of this virulent poison. In fact it contains so much time and profitable information and is of such vital importance that we have taken the liberty of reproducing it in another part of this number of the Bulletin.

In conclusion, suffer this word of warning: When you open a can or jar of fruit or vegetables examine it attentively. If there is any evidence of fermentation, any disagreeable odor, any unnatural taste, take no chances. And in the matter of tasting go about that very charily. A mere taste has been followed by death.

BOTULISM.

BY WALTER L. DODD, ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF SANITATION AND HYGIENE, PEASE LABORATORIES, NEW YORK.

Mrs. William Trinner was getting supper. The oven door was giving forth the crisp fragrance of sizzling browned fat from a juicy leg of lamb. The potatoes were boiling merrily upon the stove, while on the window edge beneath the fluttering curtains, a pan of flaky biscuits was cooling. Nearby little wisps of steam arose from the cinnamon sprinkled crust of an apple pie. On the table an opened pot of honey sparkled invitingly in the warm glow from a shaft of sunlight.

"A vegetable would be tasty," thought Mrs. Trinner. "Something that would go well with roast lamb. Ah, just the thing."

She emerged from the dark depths of the vegetable closet with a jar of string beans, canned last summer, dewy fresh from her garden. A jet of burbid liquid stained her apron as the cover was withdrawn. The beans themselves did not look as good as usual; seemed to be a little mushy. Perhaps she had better taste to make sure. Were they a little off flavor, or was it her imagination? Another nibble should tell. Yes, they were somewhat sharp, but she guessed they would do. Too bad to waste a whole jar of beans.

She turned half the jar into a pot and pushed the potatoes to the simmering heat at the back of the stove. A stench arose from the turbulent beans, a rancid order like that of spoiled cheese. Its rankness overshadowed the fragrance of the other wholesome cooked food in the kitchen. No, those beans would never do. The chickens could eat the jar contents.

Two mornings later it was an effort to get up, a muscular weakness out of all proportion to the previous day's tasks. And her eyes were playing strange tricks, a single object close by appeared double, distant objects seemed more normal. Perhaps it was because she couldn't seem to get them fully open. A little air would do her good. She'd run out to the hen yard.

Here another surprise greeted her. Several of the chickens were already dead, others occupied dejected attitudes, heads drooping on limber necks. Idly she wondered if the beans she had thrown to them had anything to do with their sickness.

The next morning she felt no better. Walking was difficult; she stepped with an odd lifting of the feet, as if walking upstairs. Her head was lolling even as the chickens. At times she had to hold it steady, cupping the chin in her hands. But sick? Pshaw! She hadn't a trace of fever.

Evening found her struck down. Her throat felt dry, swallowing was difficult. Frequently she choked. Words were fumbled.

At times her mind was cloudy. She seemed to see the jar of beans she had discarded, its murky fluid, turgid with gas bubbles, which sethed and hissed tirelessly up and down the glass sides. Suddenly they rushed together in a menacing cluster and merged into a ghostly human hand, which writhed its way from the jar. Swiftly it gathered shape. The straining fingers—lean, strong, deadly, flexed convulsively, eager to grip tender flesh. It was the hand of strangler. Closer it crept to her shrinking throat.

The coarse hair on the back of the hand rasped her chin as the lethal talons played on her throat, seeking the throttling clutch. They tightened, bit in, sunk deep—deeper—deeper.

No she did not die. The symptoms became more severe for several days, but the patient was not absolutely confined to her bed, although unable to work. Severe pains and a mucus-filled throat jeopardized her for nearly a month. Another month and she was practically well, but a half year later she continued an unusual tendency to headache and hoarseness of the throat.

What hazarded her life? She was the victim of a strange new food poison—botulism.

The striking symptoms and high fatality of this disease has made it conspicuous far beyond its value as a cause of death. In the past quarter century there have been but sixty-four cases reported. Of these stricken people only a third recovered, grim evidence of the terrible potency to this invisible poison. Like prussic acid or strychnine, the merest trace may be fatal.

A housewife with a teaspoon tasted some home-canned corn, which appeared spoiled. In a few days she choked to death. Another nibbled a string bean pod of her own canning. Within a week she gasped her life away. A man ate an olive. Three days later he was dead.

Botulism has undoubtedly existed for many years, deaths, with characteristic symptoms, as a result of sausage poisoning being reported before the disease was identified. The actual cause of the disease has only been demonstrated in comparatively recent times, 1894, by the scientist, Von Eremengenn, who studied a series of cases in Belgium. Twenty-three persons became ill, with three deaths, from eating brine preserved ham. From parts of this ham and from the bodies of the victims Von Eremengenn isolated a germ to which he gave the name Bacillus botulinus, after the Latin word, botulus, meaning a sausage.

By what seemed to be a strange caprice, the fatal poison was only found by him in a ham which had lain submerged in the pickling fluid. An uncovered ham above was harmless. Apparently measure was necessary for the toxin to form. Later it was found that air and light must be excluded, as well.

Botulism outbreaks have been reported from Belgium, France and Germany. Oddly enough, Great Britain appears to be exempt. In the United States the large majority of the outbreaks have been in California or occasioned by foods packed in that state. Cases have occurred in Idaho, Colorado, Indiana and Massachusetts.

The disease is fatal for many animals. Horses and mules have died after eating moist hay or corn ensilage. The disease known as "forage poisoning" is similar to botulism in humans and the specific poison producing germ has been isolated from feed given these animals. Chickens who have eaten spoiled can goods, which was fatal for humans, died from a disease known as "limber neck."

Advantage can be taken of the fact that the chicken frequently becomes ill almost immediately and dies in a few hours, as humans do not usually feel ill for several hours after ingesting the deadly food.

Death in the chicken before human symptoms appear gives the advantage of seeking prompt medical attention. Suspected food might also be tried out on these feathered danger signals.

The situation is reminiscent of medieval days when monarchs employed official tasters to determine that no poison lurked in the dish intended for the royal palate.

Besides horses, mules and chickens, other household animals and birds, as goats, dogs, cats, rabbits, white mice, turkeys and pigeons are reported as susceptible. Various species of flies and the common garden spider have been shown to act as distributors of the infection.

The pigeon has been indicted as a carrier, the germ being isolated several years ago in a single instance from the intestines of a so-called healthy hog. More recently the fateful organism was not found in several hundred sound hogs, but was discovered in the excreta of a hog known to have recovered from a previous attack of botulism.

Until recently it was thought that the poison developed only in meat products, particularly those of the pig. About twenty years ago American physicians began to report cases where the evidence strongly pointed to various home canned products as string beans, asparagus, corn and apricots. Cheese has also been accused. The dispute arose as to the possibility of a similar danger from factory canned goods.

The consumption of canned goods in the United States probably totals 250,000,000 cases annually. Commercial canning of food was first undertaken about 1800. Originally glass containers were employed, but tin quickly came into use. The food products were heated in an open bath; it was not until 1897 that steam processing became general. The first technical examination of canned goods was made two years earlier, 1895, on some "swells" among canned peas in Wisconsin. It was found that an increase in the temperature, the steam pressure and the time of exposure decreased the number of "swells" from 5% of the run to a negligible factor. This work marks the beginning of a scientific knowledge of foods and methods of control.

Now, besides various official laboratories, there are private institutions whose healthy experience in this particular work can be utilized with profit. In fact, the private laboratories were the first in the field.

Recent experiments have shown that not all commercially canned food products are sterile. In an examination of over seven hundred cans 8% were found to contain living organisms. Canned vegetables and fruits were more frequently sterile than meat or fish, furthermore, the organisms found with fruit were usually the more or less common moulds, the bacteria being associated more frequently with the meat products. The botulism organism was not found in this particular series of examination.

The first apparent cases of botulism resulting from factory canned products were reported in 1916. The vegetables, string beans or spinach were canned in Kansas and poisoned seven people, five of whom died.

It is only recently that this disease has attracted attention and little is known regarding the natural habitat of this ominous germ. Outside of human cases and poisoned food, it has been isolated in but a few instances—bird picked and slightly bruised cherries purchased from a first-class grocery; the excreta of a “healthy” hog who had botulism three months previous; spotted leaves of garden pole string beans, also spiders found on or near these leaves; the claw of a garden bird, moist stacked hay and stored corn ensilage. Judged by these few sources it would appear that the Bacillus botulinus has a somewhat universal distribution. It is not at all unlikely that this germ passes from the intestines of animals and birds who have had the disease to the soil and hence returns to another animal or bird with their food.

It is not likely the cycle is somewhat like this: Food containing the germ and its poison is thrown to animals. They eat, many die, a few survive. By means of their excreta the germ enters the soil and is carried to garden fruits and vegetables by birds or insects, possibly in the blown dust.

Washing of the picked fruits that is not as thorough as it should be, coupled with inadequate sterilization, permits the germ to hide unsuspected in the canned products where with the proper conditions it generates its mortal poison.

For it is a singular fact that the germ itself is harmless; it can be taken into the body with impunity. It is the poison, manufactured by the germ from food that is fatal. And this poison is destroyed by heat.

The Bacillus botulinus in common with several other germs, has many lives as the proverbial cat. When factors necessary for the germ's survival become difficult, several are able to form little seeds, technically known as spores. From these seeds or spores new germs develop, analogous to the propagation of perennial plants over different seasons from seed to flower and from flower to seed. A heat just sufficient to destroy the growing Bacillus botulinus will not destroy in the seed, or resting stage, that is, the spores from which fresh germs reproduce.

The Bacillus botulinus has another peculiarity. It does not thrive in the presence of air. Neither does it enjoy light. It insists that its food supply be moist.

Starting with the contamination of fresh foods with the Bacillus botulinus it is apparent that any heedless washing and inadequate cooking processes, followed by storage of the moist food in airtight light proof containers as the vacuum sealed tin can, would permit the germ to get into the can and there generate its deadly poison.

These are the facts in regard to the Bacillus botulinus. A slightly different picture exists for its poison. While the poison also shrinks from light or air, either of which is destructive, it differs from the germ in that it is quickly destroyed by the heat of ordinary cooking processes. Neither is the poison produced, except rarely, at the ordinary body temperature of warm blooded animals. There is another very important point necessary for the production of poison in the food by the germ—the element of time. The rapidity of the poison's full development undoubtedly varies with different foods, their manner of keeping and the virulent of the germ itself, but even under perfect conditions it is unlikely that fatal quantities of the poison are formed until after many days' storage of the canned product.

What protection is there to this fatal poison? Why is it not more commonly found? Fortunately, there are several preventive measures which protect us from this jeopardy.

The first line of defense is to prevent the Bacillus botulinus from gaining access to the canned food. To this end fruit should be carefully selected for its soundness, followed by vigorous, thorough washing to completely remove any adherent matter.

The home kitchen or the canning factory should be immaculately clean. In this connection a recent writer speaking of another unwelcome germ, Bacillus welchii, sometimes found in canned products, says: “The presence of this organism in food indicates unsatisfactory methods and should lead to a careful sanitary survey.” This is an excellent suggestion. However, periodical sanitary surveys of the scientific but practical type, not the superficial inspection for mere dirt, but the painstaking sanitary survey, digging out the hidden menaces by means familiar to the bacteriologist, are a decided advantage over the single survey made only when trouble exists.

Sterilization should be adequate, not only to kill germs, but to destroy their spores, which are so heat resistant as to survive several hours' boiling. Pressure steam processing, properly done destroys germs and spores. This efficient factory process may be contrasted with the ordinary home canning methods which depends on the boiling of water for the source of heat.

The solutions in which the foods are preserved may have a hampering influence on the production of the fatal poison. Sugary solutions as ordinarily employed in canning processes without much doubt exercise a well-marked restraint. Foods put up in brine solutions of more than 6% strength are considered to inhibit poison formation.

Another valuable defense, under present conditions, is the use of educational publicity such as the printed page or more direct appeals. The housewife can be taught protection through the use of two senses—sight and smell.

If the food within the container, either home or factory canned, can be seen and has an unusual appearance, mushy, filled with gas bubbles or otherwise unnatural, it should be regarded with suspicion. Likewise an opaque container, which has swollen ends or squirts a jet of the liquid contents when punctured, should be viewed with mistrust. Most cans are normal with wholesome contents, and by no means do all "unnatural" cans contain the deadly botulism poison.

When the container is opened it should be held to the nose. A characteristic odor, such as comes from rancid cheese or butter, calls for the immediate destruction of the contents, by heat.

Tasting of doubtful products is extremely hazardous, because of the terrible potency of the poison. It should never be attempted.

The cooking of food before use should be encouraged. In one of the reported cases a woman opened some home-canned asparagus. She noted its contents were a "little sour," but, as was her habit, drank the liquor and cooked the stalks. Her son, suspicious of the smell from the boiling asparagus, tasted a piece and threw out the pot contents. Four days later the mother was dead, the son healthy. The slender balance between life and death in these two instances hung by but a few moments of time. The mother consumed the uncooked product fresh from the opened container, the son did not eat until after it had received several moments of heating.

But why throw the burden of protection on the consumer? It is a responsibility the manufacturer should voluntarily assume.

Adequate washing of the raw vegetables or fruits, the intelligent application of sanitation by a practical service and thorough cooking, are very important barriers. They are especially important because modern canning processes are designed to exclude oxygen from the can—a condition embraced with delight by the Bacillus botulinus, growing as it does only when the air is sealed out. Furthermore, the sealed tin can affords the necessary darkness where the stealthy development of the lethal poison may proceed. But two other factors are vital for poison formation—low temperature and time. The canner can take advantage of these facts to protect the consumer.

From each batch, previously identified by some recording system, cans should be selected at random. High temperatures are a part of the "growing" season when canning is carried out, so for this reason these selected cans should be stored in a room of cool temperature. Otherwise if kept at ordinary warm summer room temperature poison production within any contaminated cans might easily be restrained until the release of the product to seasonal temperatures more favorable for poison formation. With the storage at cool temperature, poison development could proceed and after a sufficient lapse of time for its formation tests of the filtered product could be made on suitable animals. These simple precautions would prevent poison infected cans from being released on the market. Other tests might well be added, such as the determination of various germs of intestinal type, frequently associated with "food poisoning."

Furthermore, careful record keeping of batches from which tests were made would place the manufacturer in a strong position when a needless cry of "wolf" was made.

As it is now he is forced to take the defensive attitude.

It is to his advantage to assume every possible means for the protection of the public. From "The American Food Journal."

STATEMENT CONCERNING RIPE OLIVES.

About the year 1894 the germ botulinus, which produced a fatal disease called botulism, was discovered and isolated in meat in Belgium. Later numerous cases were found in meats in Germany, and until recent years this germ was supposed to infect meats only. In the latter part of 1919 the world was shocked to learn from Associated Press reports, of several deaths at Canton, Ohio, and Detroit, Michigan, which were attributed to the eating of California ripe olives, said to be infected by the germ botulinus; but no olives sold under any of our brands were involved in either of these cases, or in any other case except as hereinafter stated.

Upon receiving information in reference to the Ohio and Michigan cases, we immediately arrested important commercial operations in ripe olives pending further investigation. We conferred with our Chief Chemist, Dr. Paul D. Potter, and also with Dr. W. D. Bigelow, Chief Chemist for the National Canners' Association, Washington, D. C., who informed us that Dr. Rosenau, of the Medical Department of Harvard University, and Dr. Dickson of the Medical Department of Leland Stanford University, California, has conducted more extensive investigations in relation to this subject than any other scientists, whereupon an executive officer of this Company attended a conference with Dr. Rosenau, Dr. Dickson, Dr. Bigelow and others, for the purpose of considering this entire subject matter; and as a result of this conference, we conclude that California ripe olives, properly packed and sterilized, may safely be used as any other article of food.

While these investigations were being conducted we were astounded to receive information that five deaths had been caused from ptomaine poisoning at Java, Montana, a few days after the victims had eaten a meal at which several articles were consumed, among which were pimento stuffed California ripe olives, in glass, bearing our Batavia label. Upon investigating our records we found that more than fourteen months ago, to wit: December 4, 1918, we shipped to a firm of retail merchants at Kalispell, Montana, one case only, containing one dozen No. 10 bottles, Batavia brand, pimento stuffed California ripe olives, which were in turn sold by them, in the regular course of trade, during the remainder of the year 1918 and in the year 1919, to various customers. The report of investigators employed by the National Cannery Association, of Washington, D. C., shows as follows: "We succeeded in accounting for five of the other bottles besides the three purchased by Stanley. One of these was broken in the store, one was sold to a farmer, name unknown, one to D. E. Houston, one to W. G. Elliott, and the other to Mr. Hagen. Of these people we were able to find Mrs. Elliott and Mrs. Houston. The olives have been eaten with no ill effects. The Hagen sale was on February 6, the Houston sale on May 28, and the Elliott sale on September 22, all in 1919." This case of olives was grown and packed in California. No California ripe olives have ever been packed by us.

On October 1, 1919, a party named Stanley, residing several miles in the country, at Java, Montana, called upon our customer at Kalispell and desired six bottles of these olives, but there were only three bottles in stock, and he purchased them. One of these bottles was consumed by the Stanley family without any ill effects. Later, about November 16, the olives from the second bottle were served at a meal, together with the following named articles of food: elk meat, canned salmon, canned sweet potatoes, canned pumpkin and canned tomatoes. The third and only remaining bottle of the olives, purchased by Stanley, was forwarded by the local Health Officials to the State Board of Health, at Helena, Montana, and upon examination was found good and free from contamination.

It was claimed five persons died as a result of poison contained in the food served at the meal in question, and the death certificate issued and filed with the clerk of the Bureau of Vital Statistics by the physician in charge of one of these cases attributed death to the eating of canned salmon, but none of the certificates specially mentioned olives. It appears, however, that later reports from Detroit and Canton, concerning deaths attributed to the eating of ripe olives, were called to the attention of the physicians, and we understand that some of them, thereafter attributed the deaths at Java to the pimento stuffed California ripe olives, but no effort seems to have been made to analyze the contents of the stomachs of any of the victims.

The elk which supplied the meat consumed at the fatal meal was killed during mild weather, on October 16 or 17, several miles from Java, and, in order to reduce weight, the bones were removed, and the meat was carried on horseback across the mountains to Java, and stored in a woodshed. The written statement of the witness who handled this meat says that a portion of it "seemed tainted, and I ceased to use it except as bait for traps." The written statement of another witness says: "We went to the woodshed and examined the elk meat stored there and we both smelled of it. We agreed that it had a bad odor and smelled sour." The elk meat which was consumed in the Stanley home at the fatal meal was a portion of the elk meat referred to by these witnesses. During the entire period from October 16 to November 16, this elk meat was continuously subject to the most fertile and deep-seated infection, and especially so because the bones were removed.

The bloody condition existing in meat, which the removal of bones produces, has often been associated with botulinus growth. In his historical review of botulism, published under date of July 31, 1918, on page 10 of "Monographs of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research," Dr. Dickson uses the following language: "Kerner noted that the majority of cases of sausage (botulinus) poisoning occurred in the spring months, especially in April at a time after there had been alternate spells of freezing and thawing, and that sausages which had been prepared in the fall and had been subjected to alternate freezing and thawing were especially liable to undergo putrefaction." The evidence in the Java, Montana, case shows that the elk meat in question had been repeatedly frozen and thawed. It had much greater opportunity to develop poisonous germs than any other article of food consumed at this meal. It is important to understand that every one who ate elk meat at this meal became ill.

The open empty bottle, which had contained the olives served at this meal, was thrown into the back yard, where it remained subject to contamination, for ten days before it was found, and when found it contained about one teaspoonful of liquid. We are informed that one-half of this teaspoonful of liquid was forwarded by the local Health Officials to the State Officials at Helena, Montana, for examination, but that for some unknown reason, it never arrived at its destination. The other half of this teaspoonful of liquid was submitted to United States Government Officials for examination, and it is alleged that when it was administered to guinea pigs they developed symptoms of botulism; but, on account of the conditions above cited, this experiment is regarded by high scientific authority as of doubtful value.

Assuming, for the sake of argument, however, that this teaspoonful of liquid may have contained bacteria or poison which developed these symptoms in the guinea pigs, we suggest that the presence of bacteria or poison in the liquid may be explained as follows: The liquid in the open bottle may have become contaminated while in the back yard, or it may have become contaminated by the several persons at the table removing the olives from the bottle with the same forks used in the eating of the elk meat. Either of these hypotheses appears to us reasonable in view of the fact that the other bottle, taken from the Stanley home by the local Officials, and by them forwarded to the State Officials at Helena for examination, proved harmless; and in view of the further fact that all the other bottles which have been traced, that were contained in the case in which the one in question was shipped, were consumed without unfavorable results.

Scientific authorities agree that in its development botulinus produces in olives a characteristic foul odor and bad taste, and this is confirmed by the Government report on the cases at Canton, Ohio. The evidence shows that Stanley stated that he personally opened the bottle of olives which was consumed at the meal in question; that the seal was perfect and the odor and taste were good.

In conclusion we state: that we do not believe the olives caused the illness at Java; that we have handled pimento stuffed California ripe olives ever since their sale became general in commerce; that never before or since the date of this development at Java, Montana, has any question to our knowledge, been raised concerning the wholesomeness of any olives shipped by us. However, in order that the public might not be in danger through any lack of precaution on our part, we traced, through the examination of hundred of thousands of sales sheets, the shipments of pimento stuffed California ripe olives made by us, and requested their immediate return. These samples are being submitted to United States Government Officials for examination and we have confidence that such examination will exonerate the olives, but the facts as they may develop will be given to the public.

If all the olives had remained on the retail merchants' shelves, it would not have been difficult to secure their return, but on account of the passing of so many months since the olives were sold by us, it was deemed probable that most of them had been sold to consumers. It then became a question of the best method of reaching the packages still in the possession of consumers. We conferred with the Public Officials and it was agreed that the best way to obtain the desired results would be through the Associated Press. We preferred to assume the burden of the result of unfavorable advertising, regardless of consequences to ourselves, rather than to permit the public to be without admonition.

It is we think to be regretted that the press, in commenting upon the statement given them by the Public Officials, allowed the impression to go abroad that quantities of ripe olives were actually contaminated, and that they were widely distributed.

We do not believe any of the olives are contaminated, and we shall await with interest the result of complete examination to be made by United States Government officials.

Meantime, we are confident that the course which we have pursued will be universally approved by the public.

THE LATE WILLIAM T. CREASY.

BY FRED. RASMUSSEN, SECRETARY, PENNSYLVANIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

William T. Creasy for many years was prominent in the councils of the Pennsylvania State Grange, the Pennsylvania State College, The National Dairy Union and kindred organizations. From my acquaintance and associations with him, I admired him for his rugged honesty. He was a man of positive character. His life's work was devoted to bettering the conditions on the farm. He was especially interested in the problems affecting the dairy farmer. While deeply interested in the advancement of agriculture, Mr. Creasy was not unmindful of the influence of the home life of the farm, and to that end he sought to make the farm home a place of attraction to the boys and girls.

Regarding questions in controversy Mr. Creasy was ever a patient listener to those who disagreed with him, but possessed of a strong mind, he did his own thinking and reached his own conclusions.

Mr. Creasy was ever interested in the advancement of education. The Pennsylvania State College received his earnest support and for many years he served as a trustee of that institution.

His family will find his loss irreparable; the community in which he lived will miss him; the kindred organizations with which he was identified will feel the loss of his wise counsel.

THE WORK OF THE BUREAU DURING THE YEAR.

The work of the Food Bureau during the year 1919 developed somewhat more along normal lines than in the years of the great war.

The new fresh eggs act added to the work of the agents and chemists. Well on to a hundred prosecutions were ordered for violations of the provisions of the law.

The new law requiring egg-opening places to take out licenses enables the bureau to maintain closer supervision over the rotten egg industry and preventing the sale of its products to bakeshops for food purposes.

The new cold storage law is working very well. It differs very little from the old law, the chief difference being that the new law extends the period during which products of various sorts may be kept in storage to twelve months.

For the year 1920 about 800 more licenses authorizing the holders to sell oleomargarine at retail than in any other year in the Bureau's history.

THE TRIBUTE OF A FRIEND.

The Character, the Personality and the Life Work of William T. Creasy.

BY JAMES FOUST, DIRECTOR OF THE BUREAU OF FOODS, PENNSYLVANIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

I knew something about the late William T. Creasy for a good many years. For the thirteen years immediately preceding his death I knew the man about as well as one citizen can know another with whom he is brought into frequent contact. During that entire period our personal and official relations were exceedingly pleasant and uniformly agreeable. There were plans and policies concerning which we did not see eye to eye, but in such cases we early agreed to disagree, so that none of these things was allowed to disturb the even tenor of our friendship. Too much constructive work demanded our attention to permit of quibbles over unimportant and fleeting things. This event which has bereaved his family has left a great and painful vacancy in my life.

Although very prominent in public life for many years, actively interested in national and state problems, Mr. Creasy was always a real farmer practically engaged in the cultivation of the soil and particularly in the promotion of the dairy industry. He was prominent in the work of the Grange and will be greatly missed by fellow Grangers, for it was well recognized that he served as a balance wheel in the progress of that important organization. He will likewise be missed by his associates of the National Dairy Union, with which institution he was officially connected as secretary for several years. In the agricultural and dairy world he was a national character, admired, respected, confided in by his associates and loved by those who penetrated to his real character.

Our departed friend labored with vigor and intelligence to bring the farm and the town into closer contact than was the case in the years when he was a boy and then a young man on the farm. He felt that it was vital to the proper development and success of the farming industry that the boy and the girl should find the farm attractive enough to keep them on it when they grew to manhood and womanhood. The labors of Mr. Creasy and of men like him, together with the improvements brought about by the discoveries of modern science, have made the modern farm a much less lonely place than the typical farm of our fathers and mothers. The telephone, mail delivery and the automobile, to mention nothing else, have worked hand in hand with the Creasys of the nation to promote a love for the land and the rural life.

In the midst of most of the men of his time Mr. Creasy always reminded me of a giant oak surrounded by saplings. He was a big man in every sense of the word. Somewhat reserved in his manner, one needed to get acquainted with him to really know and appreciate him, but his friends knew that he was pure gold. Sincere and courageous in all his ways, he stood for the things he believed to be right in state and nation and while some of us were not always willing to accept his views, no man who really knew him ever questioned his absolute belief in the truth and the wisdom of the policies for which he battled. It was the widespread knowledge of his sterling character and his invincible honesty that gave him such vast influence in the Commonwealth and the nation. The fact that such men are often prominent in our public life is the best possible tribute to the general sincerity and patriotism of American voters.

Pennsylvania has lost one of her most useful citizens; the nation has been deprived of the services of a man who acted upon the fundamental principles of public as well as private righteousness; the organizations in which he was prominent for so many years are in mourning because the tongue of an unusually wise leader has been silenced; his friends are vividly conscious of a great void in their lives; his family has lost for a little while the loved presence of its revered head. We shall go to join him, although he shall not return to us. The one thing that he most ardently longed for during the last weeks of his busy life was rest. He has now arrived at the rest that remaineth to the people of God. He is walking by the banks of the river of life; presently he will repose beneath the shady branches of the tree of life. We still have the sense of his useful life, the influence of his wholesome example.

THE BUREAU AS A PROSECUTOR.

The main policy of the Bureau of Foods during the present administration has been to educate the consumer into a knowledge of his rights under the law and to make it clear to the vendor that his ultimate best interests will always be served by honest observance of law. It is a pleasure to bear witness to the general integrity and public spirit of wholesale and retail dealers in food products throughout this commonwealth. There has never been a moment when any of these men but the unworthy was in the least danger of annoyance from the Bureau of Foods or any of its agents. On the contrary, both agencies have worked harmoniously together for the general good. It is only the occasional manufacturer or vender whose soul is eaten up of greed and who imagines he can profit by undertaking to cheat the law.

But it has been necessary to look sharply after those who have been led into the way of the evil doer. Human nature is so constituted as to yield quite easily to temptation except where it is founded on the bedrock of principle. Lax law administration in any community is pretty certain to be followed by general disregard of the statutes. It has been necessary during the entire period of the present food administration to institute prosecutions and to move strenuously for the vigorous enforcement of law. It has not been a pleasant task for officials to carry into execution the mandate of law but it has been done because the finger of duty pointed in that direction only. The laws are enacted for wise purposes. It is expected that they will be obeyed. When that expectation is disappointed measures are provided whereby the guilty may be brought to book, the innocent protected and justice done all around.

While this bureau does not claim to be proud of its record as a prosecutor it certainly indulges in no regrets. It is never any pleasure to the right-minded agent of justice when the wrong doer is arrested, convicted and punished. One contemplates both the iniquity and its author with sentiments of sorrow and abhorrence. It is a pity that civilization is accompanied by so many blots. It is a pity that all men are not right-minded, lovers of law, obedient to its mandates, producers of goods in which they take a just and a natural pride. Many are; the offenders are the exceptions. Still, so long as greed leads them into evil ways they must be followed and thwarted. There is no other way.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING FEBRUARY, 1920.

During the month of February, 1920, only 36 prosecutions were ordered for violations of food laws. There were 12 prosecutions for violations of the food act. They are brought in Beaver, Berks, Bucks, McKean, Philadelphia, Potter and Venango counties, and were as follows: Bleached flour, 2; butter containing an excessive amount of moisture, 1; codfish containing added boric acid, 3; sponge cake artificially colored with coal tar dye, 1; cinnamon cake colored yellow with coal tar dye, 1; pork loins, decomposed, unwholesome and unfit for food, 1; ham, unwholesome, decomposed and unfit for food, 1; saccharin tablets for food purposes, 2. Total 12.

Eight prosecutions were brought in Beaver and Philadelphia counties under the non-alcoholic drinks act as follows: Selling cherry blossom pop containing saccharin 3; orange delight containing saccharin, 1; birch beer containing saccharin, 1; strawberry soda containing saccharin, 1; raspberry soda containing saccharin, 1; lemon soda containing saccharin, 1; victory beverage containing saccharin, 1. Total 8.

Under the oleomargarine act prosecutions were ordered in Chester, Northumberland and Philadelphia counties for the following offenses: selling oleomargarine colored with coal tar dye, for butter, 3; oleomargarine sold for butter, 2. Total 5.

Four persons were arrested in Philadelphia for violating the coffee and chicory act. Their offense was selling ground coffee containing chicory.

There were five prosecutions ordered in Philadelphia for violations of the cold storage act. Four of these were for the sale of cold storage eggs not marked on the receiver and one for the sale of cold storage chicken over time limit.

Also two prosecutions were brought in Philadelphia under the fresh egg act for the sale of eggs none of which proved fresh by test.

MAKE YOUR APPLE JUICE INTO VINEGAR.

Elsewhere will be found a warning to farmers to use up their supply of apples in making cider vinegar. We advise them not to try to sell their apple juice as cider. This advice is given because of the attitude of the internal revenue department in so including the prohibition amendment so as to include cider, fruit juices and the like in its scope. Whenever cider or fruit juices contain more than one-half of one per cent. of alcohol their sale for beverage purposes becomes unlawful and the farmer who ventures upon an experiment of this sort put himself in danger of the law.

There is a big demand for cider vinegar. Country cider vinegar is worth 40 cents a gallon by the barrel. Ten years ago it was worth only from 10 cents to 12 cents. At its present price it will handsomely pay the farmer for his labors. It is dangerous to sell cider under existing conditions. The Bulletin issues this warning not only to keep the farmer out of trouble, but also to protect his customers. It will be far better to engage in the manufacture and sale of cider vinegar than to try the perilous experiment of selling cider which may contain more than one-half of one per cent. of alcohol.

The fact that alleged medical preparations containing as high as 68 per cent. of alcohol can apparently be purchased at some drug stores with complete safety to the vender is not a relevant detail.

MAKE CIDER INTO VINEGAR, IS ADVICE TO FARMERS.

"Make all your excess apples and cider into cider vinegar. Don't take a chance on selling cider for beverage purposes."

This advice to the farmers of Pennsylvania is given by Director James Foust of the Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, in response to scores of letters from farmers in all parts of the state seeking information relative to the enforcement of the eighteenth constitutional amendment.

"Cider may be sold," said Director Foust, "without interference from any source, as long as it is free of all alcoholic contents. The state laws permit the addition of one-tenth of one per cent. of benzoate of soda for the purpose of keeping the cider sweet. If the beverage contains less than one-half of one per cent. of alcohol, it comes under the Brooks High License Law in Pennsylvania and if it contains more than one-half of one per cent. of alcohol, it comes under the Federal amendment and the person disposing of it is liable to a fine and imprisonment.

"With only a little fermentation, cider quickly assumes the proportions of a drink that is under the ban of national prohibition. With the high price that pure cider vinegar is commanding on the market to-day, I strongly advise all farmers to use their apples in the manufacture of cider vinegar and not engage in the sale of cider for beverage purposes. By doing this, the farmer gets a good return for his labor and products and escapes all possibility of wittingly or unwittingly violating the laws."

OUR EFFECTIVE FOOD ADMINISTRATION.

It has been the habit of the Director of Foods to hold frequent conferences with his agents, sometimes with the chemists, sometimes he has a combined meeting. It was the privilege of the editor of the Bulletin to be an interested spectator of a recent conference held in the city of Lock Haven. That is to say he attended the night session which began at 7.30 o'clock and terminated a few minutes before midnight. It was a fine realistic exhibition of the vigilance of the agents, of the wisdom and conservatism of the director and of the thorough manner in which the entire field is covered.

The average citizen of Pennsylvania has a very inadequate idea of the thorough and efficient manner in which the agents cover their territory or of the debt of gratitude due them from the consuming public. The present director has been at the head of the bureau for almost thirteen years. During that time there has been a complete revolution in the business of preparing food for sale as well as in methods of distribution and the final distribution to the consumer. The developments for the best interests of the consumer have come about without observation, but we think it is certain that no people on earth have better food laws more rigidly enforced than those of Pennsylvania.

At the meeting referred to a goodly number of letters of inquiry were read and commented upon by Director Foust. What he said was to the point, illuminating in every way, well calculated to enlighten any agent whose mind might have been cherishing a few doubts, and intended ultimately to work additional benefit to the eight million food consumers of this imperial commonwealth. From time to time an agent related an interesting personal experience which had come to him as he traveled his district, or explained how a vexatious but important case was treated, so that the difficulty came to an end and both consumer and vender enlightened and usually satisfied.

All the inhabitants of our republic are entitled to pure food in addition to the "life, liberty and pursuit of happiness," mentioned in the Declaration of Independence. After a somewhat intimate view of the state field, beginning in 1907 and extending down to the present time, it is the settled conviction of the writer that Pennsylvania is the leader of the sisterhood of states, so far as protective food laws are concerned. And since pure food is the corner stone of a healthy existence, Pennsylvanians have much to be happy over.

THE FOOD LAWS AND THEIR ENFORCEMENT.

Executive heads of six large national farmers' organizations in conference at the headquarters of the National Board of Farm Organizations issued a joint memorial to congress restating the positions of their various organizations as adopted at their recent annual meetings. Expressing the belief that the convictions of these organizations are shared by a vast majority of the farmers of the country, the memorial reiterates the farmers' loyalty to American institutions; declares that farmers are continuing their best efforts to maintain production and demands that labor and capital speed up production. The right to cease work is upheld, but indiscriminate striking is indefensible. The memorial condemns profiteering and urges that the law of supply and demand shall have full sway. Farmers are declared to be emphatically opposed to government ownership and continued operation of the railroads, universal military training and daylight saving. The right to collective bargaining is upheld. Governmental economy is declared essential at this time.

It is well that the government and the outside world should have an explicit view of the mind of the farmers of the country at such a time as the present. The government is not true to its foundation principles unless it strives diligently to discover the will of its constituents to the end that it may promote their happiness by doing its best to carry out the wishes of the majority. It is far from a simple task this business of running a republican government. For not all the people are of the same mind. Indeed, there are formidable combinations opposed to equally strong organizations, each holding its own peculiar views. A government that could please everybody would be a practical impossibility. Notwithstanding that, wise public servants are usually able to please a majority and to create in the minds of the minority a distinct impression that patient waiting will be rewarded by a fulfillment of desires at a not distant date.

Very seldom, indeed, does law interfere with the comfort of the innocent. It is for their protection. The food laws of this commonwealth were constructed and enacted in the belief that the householders of Pennsylvania are entitled to proper protection in the matter of food. They constitute a fairly orderly and symmetrical structure and their enforcement is being followed by the happiest results.

CIDER RULING.

James Foust, Director of the Bureau of Foods, Department of Agriculture states that the following ruling from Washington, on the cider question, is one of the broadest constructions yet placed on provisions of the act for enforcement of constitutional prohibition:—

Commissioner Kremer says that fruit juices and ciders come within the dry ban if they contain more than one-half of one per cent. alcohol. The Commissioner's interpretation of the law was set forth on January 14th in a memorandum charging prohibition directors and inspectors with the added duty of examining the alcoholic content of such beverages.

The drastic regulation went into effect with constitutional prohibition on Friday, January 16. Violation of it carries the same penalties as for the manufacture or sale of stronger liquors.

Strict enforcement of the regulation will hold liable dealers in fruit juices and ciders in which the alcoholic content increases even while in storage. The department does not intend, however, to gauge all beverages thus produced, officials said, but "a watchful eye," would be kept on these manufacturers and dealers. Natural fermentation will offer no excuse for evasion of the regulation, it was declared.

EXTRAVAGANCE AND WASTE KEEPING PRICES HIGH.

Get our heads out of the clouds, get back to earth and eliminate all extravagance and waste!

This is the prescription offered by Director James Foust of the Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, for a solution of the high cost of living problem.

"Based upon actual observation in handling the food problems of the state," says Director Foust, "we are living in an abnormal atmosphere and while there may be profiteering by some of our dealers, yet most of the responsibility for the present high prices of food stuffs rests with us and extravagance and waste are our greatest faults.

"Last fall, in a certain market in this state, a farmer placed on display his supply of roasting ears at 18 cents a dozen. A short distance away, in the same market, another farmer, selling the same grade of corn, asked 25 cents for a dozen ears. The farmer selling his corn at the higher figure, quickly disposed of his stock, women rushing by the stand where corn was sold for 18 cents, to purchase at 25 cents. The first farmer finally raised the price of his corn to 25 cents and within half an hour he was sold out.

"If two shoe merchants, offering the same grade of shoes, place their shoes on sale at different prices, the women and men will patronize the shop where the highest prices are asked.

"I admit that the necessities of life are high, but it is the things that we can get along without that really cost the most money. Let us do without the things we do not absolutely require, buying only the things we need and the cost of living will drop at once.

"The waste in the average home in Pennsylvania, in the average hotel and restaurant is enormous. If we will eliminate this waste, forego the things we do not absolutely require and get back to sane, simple living again, the major portion of the high cost of living problem will have been solved."

CAPSICUM IN GINGER ALE TO BE STATED ON LABEL.

Federal inspectors have been instructed to watch shipments of ginger ale coming within the jurisdiction of the Federal Food and Drugs Act to see that the bottles are labeled in accordance with the provisions of the law as outlined in Food Inspection Decision 177, according to a statement of the officials of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, who are charged with the enforcement of the law. That decision provides that if capsicum which is the extract of red pepper is present in ginger ale it must be declared upon the label. All interstate shipments of ginger ale found on or after March 16 which are not properly labeled in this particular will be seized, say the officials, and shipments from foreign countries will be denied entry into the United States unless correctly labeled.

The statement in full follows:

In the enforcement of the Federal Food and Drugs Act, the Department of Agriculture has always advised the trade as fully as possible by food inspection decisions, Service and Regulatory Announcements, press notices, etc., when an interpretation of the law involved a change of labels, formulas, or of standards for products. The trade is given time for adjustment where such a short delay is not seriously detrimental to the public interest.

Food Inspection Decision 177 entitled, "Soda Water Flavors and Soda, Soda Water," in conformity with this policy, was issued by the United States Department of Agriculture August 20, 1918. It was published again in Circular 136 entitled, "Standards of Purity for Food Products."

This states; in effect, that the presence of capsicum, the extract of red pepper, in ginger ale must be declared on the label. It appears from an investigation of numerous ginger ales on the market that while this regulation is being generally complied with, yet there are some bottlers of ginger ale whose products come within the jurisdiction of the Federal Food and Drug Act of 1906, who apparently are not familiar with the provisions of this regulation. Therefore, bottlers who are not complying with Food Inspection Decision 177 are warned that shipments made on or after March 16, 1920, of ginger ale which is not properly labeled will be actively proceeded against under Section 10 of the Federal Food and Drugs Act, if interstate shipment is made, or under Section 11 in the case of foreign goods offered for entry into this country.

CONCERNING UNIFORMITY OF FOOD LAWS.

For many years the Bulletin, speaking for the Bureau of Foods, has endeavored to educate the trade and the public concerning the significance and scope of the various food laws, state and national. During this period the Bureau has received the co-operation and assistance of the legitimate trade. Such organizations as the National Canners' Association, the Specialties Manufacturers' Association and the Wholesale Grocers' Associations, to mention no others, have rendered splendid service. The various civic and other associations of women and the Women's Clubs, have done much to create sentiment in favor of pure and wholesome food supplies. And so considerable progress has been made.

And yet, notwithstanding the fact that the foodstuffs furnished the people have been greatly improved in quality, there are still unscrupulous manufacturers and venders in many of the states of the union. They are endeavoring to put their fraudulent products on the market. Here and there persistent efforts are made to weaken the state food laws. Last year a cunning scheme was put on foot by means of a bill sponsored by Senator Calder, of New York, which, if enacted into law, would have nullified the provisions of all state and municipal food laws affecting all food products shipped in package form by interstate commerce.

The Bulletin is in favor of uniformity, provided the national food and drugs act is amended and made effective. As the law now stands it is weak and faulty and its enforcement seems to be only by fits and starts. Under this act, as at present interpreted, bleached flour is being manufactured and shipped by interstate commerce. In Pennsylvania the manufacture and sale of bleached flour is prohibited. The national food law permits the manufacture and sale by interstate commerce of so-called egg substitutes. In Pennsylvania the sale of such products is forbidden. There is no substitute for eggs. Starch is used as a basis for such products. This, with a little casein and coal tar dye, makes up the usual egg substitute, which is generally ornamented with a deceptive label. What a fraud upon a long-suffering public, to be authorized under the guise of a food law! The national food law also permits the sale of sausage containing cereal and water. Sixty per cent. of sausage meat, with five per cent. of potato flour, will absorb and hold like a sponge 35 per cent. of water. The potato flour costs three cents a pound in bulk; the water costs nothing—40 per cent. a fraud!

We have named only some of the more obvious objections to uniformity under present conditions. When the national food and drugs act is put in proper shape, so as to really protect the people of the country, then, and not until then, can we have uniformity.

SUGAR SHORTAGE TEMPTS UNSCRUPULOUS DEALERS.

The present shortage in the sugar market has tempted scores of unscrupulous manufacturers throughout the state to substitute saccharin for sweetening soft drinks, ice cream and pastries. As a result, Director James Foust of the Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, has instructed all field agents to be unusually vigilant for this class of offenders.

Saccharin is more than 500 times sweeter than sugar and costs only a fraction as much as sugar. It is without food value, however, and has a decided harmful effect on the human body. During the past month or two, scores of arrests have been ordered by the Bureau and half a hundred arrests of dealers scattered throughout the Commonwealth are now pending and will be ordered within a few days.

PUNISH OFFENDERS OF "PURE FOOD" LAW.

GOVERNMENT WINS 49 OF 50 CASES BROUGHT UNDER FOOD AND DRUGS ACT.

Fifty food and drug cases are reported as having been terminated in the Federal courts in a recent Service and Regulatory Announcement Supplement, No. 64, of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture. The charges of the Government were upheld in 49 of the cases, but in one seizure action the decision of the court was in favor of the claimant of the goods.

Ten actions were based on the adulteration of tomato products, such as catsup, puree, pulp, paste, and the like. The most frequent charge was that of decomposition resulting from the use of moldy or rotten tomatoes in preparing the products. The specialists of the Bureau of Chemistry have given a great deal of attention to the improvement of tomato products. Not only have a large number of prosecutions and seizures been made, but experimental work and educational campaigns have been conducted to aid the packers in developing methods to eliminate all spoiled tomatoes. There has been a marked improvement in the quality of such products, but some packers, either as the result of carelessness or from a deliberate disregard of the requirements of the law, still occasionally use tomatoes unfit for food.

ELEVEN ACTIONS ON STOCK FEEDS.

Stock feed made from cottonseed meal or cake was the basis of eleven actions, the most frequent charge being that of misbranding, because of statements on the labels claiming a higher percentage of protein than was actually present in the feed. Since the percentage of protein present in a stock feed is one of the factors in fixing the price, this form of misbranding results in the feed being sold for a higher price than its feeding value warrants. It is also misleading to the stock raiser in determining a proper feeding ration.

Canned salmon was the basis of four seizures. Spoilage of the salmon was the charge made in each seizure. In three of the cases the court ordered the salmon destroyed, while in one case the salmon was released for use in the manufacture of fertilizer. Investigations have shown that some canners of salmon do not always take proper sanitary methods in putting up their product. Studies by the specialists of the Bureau of Chemistry to improve the methods of packing salmon in order to prevent contamination are under way.

FINED $400 FOR MISBRANDED VINEGAR.

Other prosecutions and seizures covered by the notices of judgment include a shipment of sardines which were destroyed, because they consisted in part of filthy, decomposed, and putrid animal matter, and three shipments of olive oil adulterated with cottonseed oil. An artificial vinegar labeled as cider vinegar resulted in the party responsible for the violation being fined $400. One shipper who failed to appear to defend himself on the charge of adding water to milk was fined $200 and costs. A shipment of milk from which part of the butter fat had been extracted resulted in the party responsible being fined $10 and costs. A plea of nolo contendere was made in answer to the charge by the Government of shipping frozen eggs composed in part of filthy, decomposed, and putrid animal matter and a fine of $50 imposed by the court. A shipment of decomposed apple butter was destroyed. Two shipments of soaked ripe lima beans which were sold as green lima beans were seized, as was a shipment of gelatin consisting partly of glue and containing copper and zinc.

Seven actions under the Food and Drugs Act were based on the charge of adulteration and misbranding of proprietary medicines.

Fines ranging from $10 to $100 were imposed in these cases, the charge being in the main that there were false and fraudulent claims as to the curative powers of the preparations. Three prosecutions were based on the misbranding or adulteration of mineral waters which were recommended by the proprietors for the treatment of various diseases. In one of these cases in which the defendant entered a plea of guilty, a nominal fine of only one cent and costs was imposed by the court.

Charges of short weight were sustained against shipments of macaroni and spaghetti. Short weight was also established in one shipment of olive oil.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING THE MONTH OF MARCH.

Eighty-six prosecutions for violations of the food and non-alcoholic beverages acts were ordered during the month of March. Thirty-five of these were for violations of the pure food act of the commonwealth, as follows:

For selling butter in violation of Section 3, paragraph 4, of the pure food act of 1909, 1; selling butter containing an excess of water, 1; selling codfish containing boric acid, 4; selling chocolate covered cherries containing sulphur dioxide and colored with coal tar dye, 3; selling cherries containing sulphur dioxide, 1; selling Keystone cherries containing sulphur dioxide, 1; selling candy cherries containing sulphur dioxide, 1; selling figs unfit for food, 1; selling flour containing nitrous acid, 3; selling olive oil containing cotton seed oil, 1; selling sour salt containing alum, 4; selling sweet marjoram adulterated with broken coriaria leaves, 1; selling sponge cake colored yellow with coal tar color in imitation of eggs, 4; selling golden box cake artificially colored with coal tar dye, 1; selling coffee buns colored yellow with coal tar color in imitation of eggs, 3; selling cinnamon buns colored yellow with coal tar color, 1; selling cake colored yellow with coal tar color in imitation of eggs, 1; selling drop cakes colored yellow with coal tar color in imitation of eggs, 1; selling jelly roll colored with coal tar color in imitation of eggs, 1; selling layer cake colored with coal tar color in imitation of eggs, 1. These prosecutions have been ordered in Berks, Cambria, Centre, Clearfield, Indiana, Jefferson, Lycoming, Mifflin, Montgomery and Philadelphia counties.

Thirty-four prosecutions will be instituted in Dauphin, Luzerne, Jefferson and Schuylkill counties for violations of the provisions of the non-alcoholic drinks act. The offenses charged are: Selling birch beer containing saccharin, 7; selling cream soda containing saccharin, 3; selling cherry smash and cherry soda containing saccharin, 1 each; selling cherry soda containing saccharin and artificially flavored and colored, without notice of said coloring or flavoring on bottle or cap, 2; selling ginger ale, gipseys cola and lemon soda containing saccharin, 1 each; selling orange soda and orange cloud containing saccharin, 2 each; selling orange cloud containing saccharin and artificially colored, 1; selling orange crush and orangeade containing saccharin, 1 each; selling root beer containing saccharin, 2; selling sarsaparilla, strawberry soda and strawberry pop containing saccharin, 1 each; selling raspberry soda containing saccharin and artificially colored and flavored, 1; selling grapico colored with coal tar dye and artificially flavored, 1; selling grape smash, family ade, lemon smash misbranded, 1 each.

Under the milk act eight prosecutions were ordered, as follows: Selling milk low in fats and solids, 5; selling milk low in fat, 2; selling milk low in solids, watered, 1. These prosecutions will be instituted in Bedford, Clearfield, Juniata, Northumberland and Philadelphia counties.

Under the fresh egg act there will be a single prosecution. The alleged offense was committed in Philadelphia, and it was the sale of eggs for fresh which were proved to be stale.

Only two offenses are believed to have been committed under the oleomargarine act, both in Philadelphia. These were, selling oleomargarine without a license and as butter, 1; selling oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter and served at meals, 1.

Under the vinegar act but one prosecution is scheduled. This is in Clearfield county and is for the sale of distilled vinegar as cider vinegar, same being low in acetic acid and colored with caramel.

Under the cold storage act there were two prosecutions, both in Philadelphia and both for the sale of cold storage eggs not so marked on the container.

Under the ice cream act three prosecutions were ordered for the sale of vanilla ice cream low in butterfat. The offenses were committed in Philadelphia and Wyoming counties.

CONCERNING "VIRGINIA DARE WINE."

AN OPINION BY THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Honorable James Foust, Director, Bureau of Foods, Harrisburg, Pa.

Sir: You have requested an opinion as to whether the drink called "Virginia Dare Wine" comes within the Non-alcoholic Drink

Act of March 11, 1909, P. L. 15, as amended by the Act of June 16, 1919, P. L. 480, and therefore subject to your supervision as to adulteration and misbranding, as defined by that Act.

The facts upon which your request is based I understand to be as follows:

The product known as "Virginia Dare Wine" is produced by the usual process of making wine, and it is subjected to a further process of extracting the alcohol. In most instances the alcohol is completely extracted, but it occasionally happens that there is a trace of alcohol remaining, sometimes as much as three-tenths of one per cent., and the sample which happened to be purchased by your Bureau contained that quantity of alcohol.

The chemist's report indicates that this drink "possesses the general properties of light colored, unfermented grape juice and is much superior to some of the beverages which have lately appeared," and that three-tenths of one per cent. is less alcohol than is sometimes found in "unfermented fruit juices, such as grape juice, loganberry juice, apple cider, even when perfectly sweet and put up with the greatest care."

The Act of May 13, 1887, P. L. 108, known as the "Brooks High License Law," prohibits the sale, without a license, of "spirituous, vinous, malt and brewed liquors." In construing this Act of Assembly it has been held that if a liquor is vinous or spirituous a conviction may be sustained, even though there was no evidence that the liquor was intoxicating or had an intoxicating effect, Commonwealth vs. Reyburn, 122 Pa. 299; and that if the liquor sold without a license contained any alcohol such sale violated the law, even though the percentage of alcohol was slight. Convictions have been sustained where the drink was admitted to contain 87-100 of one per cent. Commonwealth vs. Wenzel, 27 Sup. Ct. 467. It has also been held that it is a violation of this law to sell liquor containing two per cent. of alcohol, even though there be no evidence that the drink was intoxicating. Hatfield vs. Commonwealth, 120 Pa. 395; Commonwealth vs. Burns, 38 Sup. Ct. 514.

The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibits—

"The manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes."

Section 2 of this amendment provides:

"The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

The State of Pennsylvania has not passed any legislation designed to enforce this constitutional amendment. Congress, however, has passed the Act of October 28, 1919, Public No. 66, 66th Congress, enforcing the eighteenth amendment.

The question, therefore, to be determined is the effect of this Congressional legislation upon the Brooks High License Law of May 13, 1887.

The proper interpretation of the words "concurrent power" given by Section 2 of the amendment to Congress and the several States is involved in this question. I think the words "concurrent power" are equivalent to "concurrent jurisdiction." If these words mean that, notwithstanding any legislation of Congress, there must also be legislation by the States before this amendment to the Constitution is enforceable, then the rule that when Congress legislates upon a subject within its jurisdiction and covers the field, it supersedes legislation by the States, is not applicable.

If, on the other hand, "concurrent power" means that either the Congress or the States have the power to enforce the amendment, then the question arises as to how far the Act of Congress has superseded the Brooks High License Law.

The cases interpreting "concurrent jurisdiction" are not uniform, and this phrase is construed with reference to the situation with which it deals. For instance, concurrent jurisdiction conferred over fishing in boundary rivers has been construed to mean that, where there is a conflict of law, the law of the State which is most restrictive in its character must prevail. In such cases "concurrent jurisdiction" is not joint in the sense that only legislative acts adopted by both States can be effective on boundary waters. State vs. Nielson, 95 Pac. 720, 131 Am. St. Rep. 765; State vs. Moyers, (Iowa) 136 N. W. 896, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 366.

It has also been held with reference to the Columbia River that Oregon can only "enact such criminal statutes as are agreed to or acquiesced in by the State of Washington, or as are already in force within its jurisdiction." Ex parte Desjeiro, 152 Fed. 1004.

As applied to Courts, "no one has ever pretended that the exercise of such jurisdiction by one Court was dependent upon its concurrent exercise by any other." Keator vs. St. Croix Boom Corporation, 72 Wis. 62, 38 N. W. 529.

A familiar application of concurrent power, though not applied at the same time, is the operation of the Acts of Congress on food products which enter into Interstate Commerce, and the subsequent operation of the laws of the State upon such food products.

It would render this Article of the Constitution ineffective if Congressional action in carrying it into effect had to await the concurrent legislative action of the several States. National prohibition would be a farce, and the matter would still remain within the complete control of the police power of the several States, exercised through its concurrent legislation.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the words "concurrent power" are intended to authorize either the State or the Federal government to carry the eighteenth amendment into effect, and if the State imposes severer restrictions than those imposed by Congress the State laws may, within the confines of the State, be enforced.

When the State does not legislate on the subject, the Act of Congress has, in my opinion, the effect of superseding prior State legislation which is inconsistent with it.

It is a familiar rule that Acts of Congress only supersede State laws in so far as the latter are in conflict with the paramount Federal statute. This rule has been applied in our own State to the Federal Bankruptcy Acts. Potts vs. Smith Manufacturing Company, 25 Sup. Ct. 206; Hoover vs. Ober, 42 Sup. Ct. 308.

How does this leave the situation? The Act of Congress has defined intoxicating liquors to be any liquid fit for beverage purposes, by whatever name called, "containing one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume."

If there were nothing else in the Act of Congress, the conclusion would be irresistible that it legislates only as to vinous, spirituous, malt or brewed liquors which contain more than one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume, and that it does not cover such liquors if they contain less than one-half of one per centum of alcohol.

The Brooks High License Law having been construed to include liquors containing any percentage of alcohol, and, therefore, percentages less than one-half of one per cent., would cover a field that has not been covered by the Act of Congress. It would follow that the Act of Congress has not superseded the Brooks High License Law as to such liquors, but in Section 1 of Title II of the Act of Congress defining "intoxicating liquors" there is this further provision:

"That the foregoing definition shall not extend to dealcoholized wine nor to any beverage or liquid produced by the process by which beer, ale, porter or wine is produced, if it contains less than one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume, and is made as prescribed in section 37 of this title, and is otherwise denominated than as beer, ale, or porter, and is contained and sold in, or from, such sealed and labeled bottles, casks, or containers as the commissioners may by regulation prescribe."

Section 37 provides that—

"A manufacturer of any beverage containing less than one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume may, on making application and giving such bond as the commissioner shall prescribe, be given a permit to develop in the manufacture thereof by the usual methods of fermentation and fortification or otherwise a liquid such as beer, ale, porter, or wine, containing more than one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume, but before any such liquid is withdrawn from the factory or otherwise disposed of the alcoholic contents thereof shall under such rules and regulations as the commissioner may prescribe be reduced below such one-half of one per centum of alcohol."

This section further provides how the alcohol may be extracted and taxed, and that no tax shall be assessed on dealcoholized wine containing less than one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume.

Does this provision, which covers the manufacture of dealcoholized wine, so cover its sale as to supersede the Brooks High License Law regulating beverages containing less than one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume? I do not think it has that effect. The Act of Congress determines how dealcoholized wine may be made, but it is not, in my opinion, intended to regulate the sale thereof. The Brooks High License Law, as interpreted by the Courts, distinctly regulates the sale of dealcoholized wine from which all the alcohol has not been extracted, and prohibits such sale without a license.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the Act of Congress has not superseded the Brooks High License Law in so far as beverages are concerned which contain less than one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume, and that a license is required to sell such beverages. This conclusion is consistent with that reached by the Court of Quarter Sessions of Schuylkill County in the matter of the petition of Wilson G. Freeze for the transfer of a retail liquor license, wherein the Court came to the conclusion that a license was still required to sell "vinous, spirituous, malt or brewed liquors, or any admixture thereof" containing less than one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume, and that such requirement was not affected by the National Prohibition Act.

I, therefore, advise you that "Virginia Dare Wine," if it contains any percentage of alcohol, does not come within the Non-alcoholic Drink Act of March 11, 1909, P. L. 15, as amended by the Act of June 16, 1919, P. L. 480, and is, therefore not subject to your supervision.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) W. I. SCHAFFER,
Attorney General.

In order that there may be no confusion or misunderstanding with reference to the enforcement of the new law prohibiting the sale of eggs for and as "fresh eggs" that are not "fresh eggs," as may appear upon proper test, James Foust, Director of the Bureau of Foods, Department of Agriculture, issues the following statement:

There are four classes of eggs—

- 1st. A "fresh egg" is one that is understood to have the following qualities: Its white is capable of whipping well; in cooking it can be satisfactorily poached or soft boiled; it has not absorbed foreign disagreeable odors; its embryo shall not have developed appreciably. The yolk should be fairly stiff and well rounded and the white should not be watery, and the chalaza shall be well defined.
- 2nd. Cold storage eggs must be sold in accordance with the Cold Storage Law and must be represented and labeled "cold storage eggs."
- 3rd. Eggs kept for a period of time by the water glass, lime or other methods that cannot be classed as "fresh eggs" but are edible, wholesome and suitable for all food purposes except such as require "fresh eggs."
- 4th. Eggs that are decayed, partly decayed, or decomposed and unfit for food purposes, have a commercial value for tanning leather such as is used in the manufacture of gloves. Rotten eggs must be promptly denatured with kerosene oil, and when opened must be placed in a container painted a bright red color. It is unlawful to open rotten eggs and remove the content from the shell in establishments where food products are prepared or manufactured, or to open rotten eggs in an establishment where good eggs are opened for food purposes.

LET NOTHING SPOIL.

Heat, dirt, improper handling, flies, insects, and rats, or mice are the greatest food wasters, states James Foust, Director of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

KEEP PERISHABLE FOOD COLD.

Keep perishables cool, clean and covered.

The moment meat, milk, fish and eggs are allowed to get warm they begin to spoil.

Bacteria and germs multiply rapidly in slightly warm food and quickly make it dangerous or unfit to eat.

Keep perishable food in the coolest, cleanest place you can provide, preferably in a good refrigerator or ice house, but at any rate, in covered vessels suspended in the well, or in the coolest clean place in your cellar.

Dry cold is a better preservative than damp cold.

KEEP FOOD COVERED AND CLEAN.

The dust particles in the air carry molds and germs.

Meat, fish and milk are ideal breeding grounds for such germs. Keep your food covered so that these bacteria and germs will have as little chance as possible to get on your food.

House flies, better called "typhoid flies," are among the dirtiest things that enter our homes. They fly from privies, sewers and manure heaps, carrying filth on their feet, which they deposit on any food on which they alight. Frequently germs of typhoid fever are carried by flies in the filth on their bodies and in their excrement (fly specks).

Ordinarily cleanliness demands that flies be kept out of our homes and away from our food.

Health protection makes it essential to banish flies. Keep all food covered, or at least screened from these carriers of deadly disease and filth. Destroy flies by every possible means.

GUARD FOOD AGAINST VERMIN.

Rats and mice destroy millions of dollars worth of food and other property every year in homes, on farms and in business establishments. Many rats harbor the germs of bubonic plague. Trap and kill them. Look upon every mouse as an enemy to your property. Eradicate roaches and house ants.

KEEP WEEVILS OUT OF CEREALS.

Keep your food where such pests cannot reach it.

Keep household pets away from food.

STORE VEGETABLES AND FRUITS PROPERLY.

Don't let fresh vegetables or fruits wilt or lose their flavor or begin to rot because they are handled carelessly. Keep perishable vegetables in cool, dry, well-aired, and for most vegetables, dark rather than light places.

Learn how to store potatoes, cabbage, root crops, fruits and other foods so that they will keep properly for later use.

SANITARY CONTROL OF FOOD MANUFACTURING PLANTS.

BY L. M. TOLMAN.

There are at least two standpoints from which this subject of sanitary control of food manufacturing plants may be discussed; one from the standpoint of control of disease distribution and second from the standpoint of the prevention of spoilage and loss of food value through improper handling, and it is from this latter standpoint that I am going to direct my discussion.

Cleanliness is next to Godliness in the manufacture of all food products, not only from the standpoint of decency, but also from the standpoint of business efficiency, that is, in the prevention of loss by spoilage which is a very material and important question in the handling of all food products. By cleanliness, I mean not only the superficial cleaning, but that real cleanliness which prevents bacterial infections and removes bacterial contamination as well as the more apparent dirt. Keeping qualities of foods, especially such foods as meats and similar products is a most important factor in their value, and we know that some products keep much better than others of the same general character, some manufacturers' products keep better than other manufacturers' products of the same kind, and I believe that in many cases, a study of the fundamental facts would show that the relative keeping qualities is dependent to a large extent, on cleanliness and sanitation in the methods of handling the products. Of course, I do not mean to indicate that a product does not have to be properly handled after manufactured, but it is the initial contamination of a product brought about in its manufacture that has the most to do with its future keeping qualities, and it is upon the subject of what really constitutes cleanliness that I desire to enlarge upon to a certain degree at this time.

For instance, in order to illustrate what I mean by cleanliness, I am going to give two or three concrete illustrations. I think the most striking illustration, perhaps, that has been given publicity in the last few years is the work of Dr. Chas. E. North, of the New York Milk Commission, on clean milk. Many of you heard him last year at Atlantic City in his very striking address on that subject. And along with this I would not forget the work of the Bureau of Animal Industry on clean milk, and especially their work on the vital necessity of sterilization of milk cans and other utensils used on the farms. The point which I got from Dr. North's lecture and from his work and from the work of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and my own experience in connection with the study of milk supplies of various cities, while I was connected with the Bureau of Chemistry, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, is that you cannot produce clean milk by what are known as ordinary methods of cleanliness such as washing, scrubbing, and rinsing of the utensils used in the handling of milk, but that it is absolutely essential that these utensils be sterilized. Every utensil which comes in contact with the milk from the time of milking to its final delivery, should be sterilized in order to produce a milk which has satisfactory keeping qualities as well as a milk which is sanitarily clean.

The necessity of sterilizing of utensils used in the handling of foods was never so strongly impressed upon me as it was during the work done two years ago under my supervision in the study of milk supply at St. Louis, where we compared milk handling in the ordinary way in a good clean dairy with milk handled in the same way, but the buckets, pails, and cans sterilized. The result was most astounding as regards the keeping qualities of the milk handled in the sterilized containers. We found, as a matter of fact, that the unsterilized containers, even though they had been washed, contained such large numbers of bacteria that the milk placed in them received a large immediate contamination that the speed of decomposition was tremendously increased. This is true, in my judgment, as regards the handling of any similar food product and that many losses by spoilage of such easily decomposed foods as milk could be overcome by sterilization of machinery and other pieces of apparatus coming in contact with the product at various stages of its manufacture. It is also true from the experience of manufacturers that products which have begun to spoil or deteriorate are very difficult to properly preserve afterwards. This has been emphasized in a number of reports; for instance, Dr. Bitting of the National Canners Laboratory called attention to the fact that peas which had been allowed to become infected in the fields or had become sour in the handling were much more difficult to sterilize in the future canning operations, and spoilage occurred although the processing given to them was sufficient to properly sterilize clean and sound peas. I think this is more or less an experience with all food products, that products which have begun to spoil are more likely to spoil even if they are to be canned and processed later.

Another illustration of the point which I have in view in connection with this discussion was brought to my attention of some investigation carried on several years ago while I was connected with the Bureau of Chemistry, in connection with the manufacture of edible gelatine. In one plant we found that the finished product was badly infected and much deteriorated and more or less decomposed, and yet the utmost efforts had been made to keep the plant clean and sanitary, but a study of the situation showed that the real source of trouble in this particular case was the use of the water for washing the knives and spraying the gelatine slabs while they were cut into thin layers to be placed on the drying frame. We found that the water was badly contaminated and was, as a matter of fact, inoculating the gelatine so that while it was drying on the frames a very material growth of bacteria took place and the product was very materially decreased in value as an edible gelatine, and while the water appeared from the ordinary standpoint to be a pure, clean water, bacteriological tests of this water showed conclusively that this was the source of trouble and that the finished product could not be called a clean product because it had come in contact with the water which may be called dirty.

In many instances in the study of the handling of food products, we have been able to find by going back over the various steps in the handling of the product that in some particular point, a bacterial infection was being imparted to the food and was the cause of the future lack of keeping qualities and that the remedy in most cases was extremely simple. I remember in connection with this same gelatine investigation mentioned above, in another factory we found by taking samples of the gelatine from its first stage of manufacture through each operation that there was one point where a large cock was so arranged that a small amount of gelatine remained in it in spite of the washing. This gelatine remained here at a warm temperature between the operations, two or three hours and enormous quantities of bacteria developed and contaminated the next run so seriously that at times the gelatine would liquify upon the drying trays. This was eliminated by simply steaming out the cock after each operation.

I could go on and illustrate by a number of similar experiences that have come to me in the course of my experience, but the point which I desire to impress particularly at this time is the necessity of scientifically going after the manufacturing operation, studying it from the beginning to end, and I am sure that you will find the science of bacteriology a most tremendous help in the study of these problems, in that it is a most sensitive indicator of the points where trouble is likely to develop and a tremendous amount of time and energy is often wasted because of the fact that a systematic study has not been made in this way to determine the actual point where the trouble arises and eliminate it. There is a tremendous field of operation for trained workers to do along this line of the sanitary control of good manufacturing, particularly from this standpoint of the prevention of spoilage, and at this time everything should be done to prevent spoilage, as it means loss of food both as regards quality and quantity.

EFFECTS OF ENFORCEMENT OF THE NATIONAL FOOD AND DRUGS ACT OF JUNE 30, 1906.

BY JAMES FOUST, DIRECTOR, BUREAU OF FOODS, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

I find it difficult to separate, sharply, the effects of this law, itself, and those of the long and vigorous publicity campaign which led to its final enactment. During this campaign, made possible only by the free, public-spirited assistance of the press, the people of the States were strongly roused to the wide-spread abuses that existed and to their increasing menace.

In 1897, barely a dozen states had enacted general food laws; by 1906, few states were without such laws. Practically all these laws conformed to the general type of the proposed national act. Thereby the campaign for an interstate food and drug commerce law secured substantially uniform requirements with respect to foods, which would have been of great value to both the bogus and the honest maker and dealer in these commodities, even though the national food and drugs act, itself, had failed of passage.

This campaign and the passage of the national act, moreover, encouraged the strong, true men of the trade and led to the organizing of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association and to the organization of active and efficient state associations, and also to the strong development of far-sighted, efficient bodies interested in particular growths of products, such as the National Canners' Association. In my survey of changes for good effected in the food business, since 1900, the strong aid of these influential organizations cannot, in justice, be overlooked.

The national law, itself, is a compromise, with the weaknesses and, no doubt, some of the wisdoms of the compromise. As a means for the direct suppression of the use in commercial foods of deleterious substances, it has proven weak when brought to the test of Supreme Court construction. It ought not to be necessary that the people should have to bear the burden of proof now required under the national act before a food manufacturer can be restrained from adding, for his own commercial advantage, new substances, possibly deleterious to the health of his customers, until such substance shall have been tested by competent public authority and certified to be harmless. But this is what is now required by the present wording of the national act, and it is not only necessary to prove that the added ingredient is deleterious or poisonous, but that, in the quantity used, the product containing it is so affected thereby that it may itself be injurious to health; and even such undesirable additions may be used externally as preservatives if "the preservative is necessarily removed mechanically" by maceration in water.

The phrasing of the corresponding clause of the Pennsylvania food law is far better, declaring a food to be adulterated "if it contains any added substance or ingredient which is poisonous or deleterious to health"—which prohibits the introduction of such material in any quantity under the opinion of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Commonwealth vs. Kevin. This wording should be substituted for the present language of the National Act.

The obscurities of the clause exempting foods bearing "distinctive names," as this term has been construed in the opinion of Attorney General Wickersham, and of the definition of the term "blend," which is wide in the scope of its effect, are unfortunate.

The provision for a board of regulation, composed of three cabinet officers, of whom two must be chiefly occupied with other affairs, could well be replaced by giving one competent, broad-gauged man the power and holding him responsible.

Notwithstanding the limits imposed by the weaknesses above mentioned, the enforcement of the national law has caused the disappearance from interstate food trade of a host of bad products.

Strengthened by the Shorley amendment, the law has wrought a revolution in the patent medicine business, and is rapidly driving the dangerous frauds out of existence.

I would respectfully urge, if the Federal Courts would rely less upon much restricted publicity and a nominal fine to arouse the fear of the evil-doer, and would, now that the law's requirements are generally understood, impose the full penalty of the law upon old and daring offenders even more could be accomplished.

Announcement made a few days ago from the State Food Bureau concerning cereal food preparations having called forth many inquiries, Director Foust thinks it is timely to make a frank statement of the evils discovered by the Bureau in connection with this particular trade and to warn dealers of the measures that will be taken to stop the existing abuses.

There is no criticism, the Director remarks, of the food quality of the average breakfast cereal when it is sold in a fresh condition to the consumer, but it is well known to all dealers that these preparations are very liable to insect attack unless the greatest care be taken to keep the stock fresh and to store in places where the danger of such attack is least. Past examinations by the Bureau have revealed numerous cases in which the contents of packages were simply alive with vermin and cob-webbed with the tissues woven by the insect larvae they contained. Travelers say that the Sandwich Islanders are very fond of snails, worms, and the like, but the Director is satisfied that Pennsylvanians have no tastes in that direction and most earnestly desire to be protected from the danger of unknowingly being required to mix their vegetable diet with such meat. The Director is determined that this outrageous condition shall be stopped.

The Director recognizes the condition confronting the retailer in keeping his stock of breakfast foods fresh; and wholesalers who make a careful comparison of the one hundred to one hundred and fifty brands of such foods on sale in the State will find that in reality there are only twelve to fifteen types of breakfast foods that differ at all distinctly one from the other, and yet nearly every week sees community after community canvassed by agents presenting samples of some new breakfast food, taking orders for the same and turning them over to the local grocers supplying these several families, with the demand that he add this new name to his stock, despite the fact that his shelves are already crowded with one hundred other brands. And immediately thereafter the same merchants are induced to stock largely with this new named variety by reason of quantity discounts. The demand for the goods earlier in stock temporarily, or permanently, stops, but the goods remain on the shelves, and are held there for months, or even for years, with the vain hope that the breakfast food fashions may turn and the old stock become salable. Under this condition of affairs "every bug has his day."

The difficulties of the retailer under these conditions are recognized, but the rights of the consumer for protection against this evil cannot be overlooked. The Director wants every retailer handling cereal goods to understand that the retail stocks in every part of the State are to be thoroughly sampled and sent to State College for a scientific examination and that whenever contamination by bugs, slugs and the like is detected prosecutions will be instituted in every case and vigorously pressed. This frank note of warning is given so that the retailer may have a fair opportunity to clean up his stock and consign to the dump every package of cereal that is in condition to bring him into trouble because of its lack of freshness or its location near weevilly goods, since even fresh goods may quickly become weevilly if stored in the neighborhood of old packages containing these insects. Despite the difficulties of these conditions the retailers have a remedy in their own hands, and that is to buy in small quantities, turn the stock often and so have little left long enough upon their shelves to be in serious danger of insect attack. If the retailers, aided by judicious co-operation of manufacturers and jobbers to remedy existing conditions, do not get rid of this evil it is possible that the people may feel it necessary to adopt a remedy proposed in other states against the sale of stale stocks of perishable goods such as these cereal preparations, namely, that of requiring that the package shall bear a stamp indicating the date of manufacture of the goods.

The Director earnestly hopes that the retailers of the State will examine their own stocks and protect their own customers before the Food Agents reach their stores, and by so doing avoid trouble of a more serious character for themselves.

Extracts from an Address of
WILLIAM B. COLVER, MEMBER, FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Before the
TRISTATE WHOLESALE GROCERS ASSOCIATION,
Harrisburg, Pa.

THE EXCESS PROFITS TAX.

But a re-establishment of foreign exchange and a settlement of our foreign relations political and financial, will not restore export trade if our prices must be based upon unhealthy costs of production at home. The cost of production at home cannot be reduced until our price structure comes down. Measured in purchasing power, wages would be higher and profits would be greater if both could be reduced in dollars and those dollars applied to cheaper food, fuel and clothing and cheaper materials which enter into all sorts of manufacture.

The unhealthy price structure rests upon a number of foundation stones. One of the greatest of these, and one of the least excusable and most easily removed, is the excess profits tax.

The excess profits tax was never designed to be and never was a revenue measure. At the time that the Government was fixing prices on various commodities, it found that the cost of production in different mines, mills and factories covered a very wide range. But since a certain quantity of a given commodity was imperatively needed, a price was fixed high enough to bring out the needed production from the high-cost producers. This gave abnormal and undue profits to low-cost producers and the excess profits tax was intended as an equalizer to bring these undue profits back to the public treasury. Prices are no longer fixed by the government and therefore the only reason for the existence of the excess profits system has absolutely disappeared.

The excess profits tax is passed on and multiplied until about four or five dollars is taken out of your pocket, my pocket and the pocket of the man on the street for every dollar that finally gets to the public treasury. The tax is difficult and cumbersome to collect and bears inequitably upon different concerns of the same size and profitability. As a matter of fact, it is a bonus for inflated capitalization and a penalty on conservative capitalization. It should be repealed at the earliest possible moment and its repeal I am certain, will result in an almost immediate lowering of the whole unhealthy price structure which is a burden alike upon every citizen whether he be consumer, merchandizer, producer, or tax-payer.

THE INCOME TAX.

Just as the excess profits tax lays a palsying hand on domestic and foreign trade, and just as its burdens tend to be passed on until, at last they rest heaviest upon those least able to pay, just so, by a curious inversion do the higher surtaxes of the income tax tend to operate as a powerful brake upon the wheels of commerce and industry at this moment when it is most desirable that those wheels should be gotten into smooth peacetime operation.

The use of the money of the very rich is sorely needed by industry and trade, and yet, through the operation of the higher rates of the income surtax the very rich man is tempted and urged to withdraw his capital from useful and productive enterprise or to refrain from investing in foreign securities. He is invited, instead, to invest in non-taxables. These are municipal and state bonds. As the higher rates of the income surtax are reached the very rich man will buy more and more freely of non-taxable securities and to accept a very low rate of interest.

This will invite an era of wasteful and extravagant expenditure for public works—municipal and state—at a time when every ounce of muscle and every penny of capital should be directed to aiding useful production in this country directly and, indirectly, abroad. * * *

WARN MANUFACTURERS AGAINST FLY EVIL.

The near approach of warm weather and the fly-breeding season has brought a note of warning to the manufacturers of ice cream and soft drinks from Director James Foust of the Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

The advent of prohibition has greatly increased the ice cream and soft drink industry in the state. Last year it was necessary for the Bureau of Foods to prosecute a number of soft drink manufacturers for selling beverages containing flies and cock-roaches. Manufacturers are warned that their establishments must be thoroughly screened during the warm weather and that every precaution must be taken to keep flies away from the various manufacturing operations.

Failure to comply with these regulations will result in prosecution and the agents of the Bureau have been instructed accordingly.

PUBLICITY IN FOOD CONTROL.

James Foust, Director of the Bureau of Foods, Department of Agriculture, states that publicity is the watchword of the hour. Propaganda in various forms pervades every avenue of American life and engages the energies and the genius of a host of disseminators of information. Some of this publicity is benevolent and helpful; much of it is baleful and injurious. There was an enormous amount of harmful propaganda afloat during the great war. This did not so much concern the prosecution of that splendid effort to preserve and enlarge the world's freedom, but was especially injurious in creating unnecessary alarm concerning the ability of the people to procure such prime necessities of life as sugar, salt and other articles of common use. Some indiscreet persons also do harm by foolish and untruthful propaganda. Many of these do not act from interested motives, but they seem unable to restrain their tongues. With them, as in the days of the Apostle James, the tongue is an unruly member.

The Director adds that there is a commendable instance of the fruits of publicity. By co-operation in this matter the National Canners' Association has revolutionized the canning industry. By the expenditure of large sums of money and the exercise of scientific skill on reaching the public through various interesting publications, this association has absolutely eliminated the odium associated with the industry a quarter of a century ago. The members of the association got their products right and then proved the truth of their statement by the superior quality of their goods.

The same principle applies to the Specialty Manufacturers Association, The National Wholesale Grocers' Association and also to the State Wholesale Grocers' Associations. These are truly wonderful organizations, reaching every section of our country. They have at their heads the brightest business minds the country is capable of producing. In each branch of the business there are brilliant orators, convincing writers, all working together harmoniously for the purpose of bringing to pass the very thing for which food control officials were established.

CONCERNING DRIED FIGS AND OTHER DRIED FRUITS.

The Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, has instituted and is carrying out an extensive investigation, accompanied by many analyses of dried figs and other dried fruits. The importers and jobbers will be notified when the work is completed. They will likewise be given complete information concerning the requirements of the law as it relates to dates and other dried fruits, especially in connection with the treatment of such fruits with sulphur dioxide. Notice will likewise be given of the peremptory purpose of the Director of Foods to enforce the provisions of the law.

Director Foust states that there is one brand of layer figs grown and press packed in Turkey which has attracted marked attention and may well be commended to the attention of Americans who are engaged in the business of packing figs. The full history of this brand of layer figs will be made known in due time to the trade and the public. The fruit is of superior quality and contains no sulphur dioxide whatever. It is only reasonable to suppose that if figs can be prepared and transported from Turkey without the use of sulphur dioxide the same or a similar process may be surely employed with safety in other parts of the world.

This, we imagine, should be especially true of California figs. We are obliged to state, and we do it with considerable reluctance, that a majority of the figs produced in Turkey are far superior in appearance, in the way they are prepared and pressed for sale to those of California, and as we have already stated, they are absolutely free from sulphur dioxide. A large quantity of the California figs now in the Pennsylvania market are put up in cheap round wooden retail containers. They fail to present as attractive appearance as belongs to the figs from Turkey. Some of them have a mouldy appearance. They are not placed in containers in layer form, contain sulphur dioxide and are not marked, as required by law.

We do not mean to say that all California figs appearing in eastern markets have an inferior appearance, although some do; neither would we be understood as saying that all figs from Turkey are free from sulphur dioxide. We do mean to say that a large proportion of the dried figs that contain sulphur dioxide and are sold in our markets are not labeled to show its presence, as required by law. If the large dealers who supply the trade, both wholesale and retail, do not see to it that dried figs and other dried fruits treated with sulphur dioxide are properly labeled, showing the presence of the sulphur dioxide and that it is used in their preparations, they will have many prosecutions to defend in the courts of Pennsylvania.

DEFINING PENNSYLVANIA'S LAW.

The following letters written by Food Director Foust are self-explanatory and are reproduced here for the information of dealers and others interested:

Editor, "Confectioners' Gazette," 366 Broadway, New York City:

Dear Sir: There seems to be a misunderstanding with at least some manufacturers of and dealers in confectionery regarding the Pennsylvania General Food Act of May 13, 1909, copy of which is enclosed, as it relates to chocolate coated cherries and other candied fruits where sulphur dioxide is present in the finished product.

Some members of the trade are under the impression that a trace or small amount of sulphur dioxide may be present without violating the law, and on this point they have been wrongly advised. No confectionery can be sold in Pennsylvania containing sulphur dioxide, regardless of the quantity. On this very question the case of Commonwealth vs. Pflaum was carried from the lower court to the Supreme Court. In the Pflaum case the charge was selling marshmallow candy which contained fifty parts to the million of sulphur dioxide, and the Supreme Court sustained the contention of the Commonwealth, which was that candy could not be sold in Pennsylvania if it contained sulphur dioxide, regardless of the quantity.

I also enclose copy of letter addressed to Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, Washington, D. C., and may I ask that you reproduce both letters in your valuable publication, if you deem it advisable, so that the trade may be fully informed and thereby prevent trouble for all concerned.

I might add that we have now about forty or fifty prosecutions in different sections of this State, charging the sale of chocolate coated cherries and other candied fruits containing sulphur dioxide. The confectionery was made by different manufacturers.

Very truly,

JAMES FOUST, Director.

Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, Chief, Bureau of Chemistry, Washington, D. C.:

My Dear Dr. Alsberg: I have your favor of the 25th enclosing copy of communication addressed to Mr. Leo B. Forst, Chief of the Cincinnati Laboratory, and signed by the Rheinstrom Brothers Company, Cincinnati, and in reply thereto permit me to say that glace pineapple fritters containing sulphur dioxide are unlawful and cannot be sold in Pennsylvania, for the reason that the Act of May 13, 1909, copy of which is enclosed, specifically prohibits the sale of all articles of food containing sulphur dioxide, except dried fruits and molasses. I would invite your attention to section two of the law, defining the term "food," which includes confectionery, and to section three, defining when an article of food shall be deemed to be adulterated.

You will also find enclosed page from our Law Bulletin No. 331, containing Digest of Decisions Relative to Food Laws, with the reference to the case Commonwealth vs. Pflaum, 263 Pa. 294, affirming 50 Pa. Super. Ct. 55, underlined in red. This case was for selling marshmallow candy containing sulphur dioxide. It was carried to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania and the contention of the Department sustained. The marshmallow candy in question contained fifty parts of sulphur dioxide to the million, and the defense contended just what the Rheinstrom Brothers Company is now contending, that it is a trace. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has settled this question once for all—if an article of food, including confectionery, contains any sulphur dioxide whatever, its sale is prohibited in this State.

No declaration of sulphur dioxide on the label is considered, for the reason that no quantity of sulphur dioxide is permitted in any article of food, except dried fruits and molasses. You will note that I have underlined the provision of the law in clause fifth, section three, on page 2, relating to dried fruits and molasses.

Regarding the analysis of a sample of so-called Maraschino cherries on page 101 of the Monthly Bulletin for November and December, 1919, permit me to add that no sulphur dioxide was detected. In some samples of Maraschino cherries our chemists cannot detect its presence; in other samples it will vary up to 350 parts to the million.

I have enclosed a carbon copy of this letter for you to forward to the Chief of the Cincinnati Laboratory, and may I ask that you have him leave the Rheinstrom people read it.

Very truly,

JAMES FOUST, Director.

SULPHUR DIOXIDE IN ANY QUANTITY FORBIDDEN.

The use of sulphur dioxide, in even the most minute quantities, in the preservation of confectionery, will not be permitted by the Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture. The recent appearance on the market in this State, of chocolate covered cherries containing sulphur dioxide has led Director James Foust of the Bureau, to issue orders to all his agents to round up and prosecute all dealers and manufacturers handling the adulterated confectionery.

Director Foust has also taken the matter up with the confectioners' organization in the State and the trade papers, calling attention to the fact that the Pennsylvania food laws specifically prohibit the sale of any confectionery containing sulphur dioxide, regardless of the quantity.

The Bureau of Foods, in the case of Commonwealth vs. Pflaum, won a decision in the lower courts of the State and this was subsequently sustained by the Supreme Court. In this case the defendant was charged with selling marshmallow candy which contained fifty parts to the million of sulphur dioxide. The defendant's attorneys contended that there was but a faint trace of the acid in the confectionery but the courts held that its presence in any quantity constituted a violation of the law.

"The majority of the manufacturers of confectionery have announced that they will use no sulphur dioxide in confectionery sold in this State," said Director Foust. "The dealers who have not taken this stand will be prosecuted to the full limit of the law. A large number of prosecutions have already been ordered and more are under way. We intend to make the candy sold in this State safe for little children as well as the adults, and we are amply backed by the law to successfully prosecute manufacturers who have the mistaken idea that by using only a small amount of sulphur dioxide they can escape. The sulphur dioxide is used to preserve the fruits. It is deleterious, even in minute particles, to the human body and it can have no place in the confectionery in this State."

THE UNLAWFUL USE OF SACCHARIN.

Since February 15, the special agents and chemists of the Bureau of Foods have been very busy collecting and analyzing samples of non-alcoholic drinks sold in this Commonwealth. Owing to the high price of sugar, to say nothing of its scarcity, a considerable number of bottlers took the liberty to use saccharine in lieu of sugar, as required by law. The result, which was inevitable, was that over two hundred prosecutions have been instituted, almost every section of the State producing its quota.

Recently Judge Audenried, of Philadelphia, sentenced some of the defendants to pay fines of $100 each. In imposing sentence the judge declared that this practice must be stopped or jail sentences will have to be resorted to. Philadelphia, Luzerne and Lackawanna counties are the particular places in which practitioners of this nefarious business have been most numerous. At least such was the case quite recently. It will require a State-wide campaign to determine just how wide-spread the custom is.

Director Foust has issued orders to the special agents of the Bureau buying and bringing prosecutions until this injurious practice is discontinued. Warrants have been served against many bottlers charging them with numerous offenses, each sale constituting a separate and distinct violation of the law.

In connection with the soft drink investigation it was discovered by the chemists that some chocolate coated cherries containing sulphur dioxide were on sale. The use of this substance in food products is prohibited by the laws of Pennsylvania as clearly as they prohibit the use of saccharin. About fifty arrests have been made in Central Pennsylvania for the unlawful sale of such chocolate coated cherries. In nearly every instance the fine provided by law has been paid and the illegal sale discontinued.

In the spring crusade several dealers were prosecuted for selling dried cod and other dried fish containing boric acid. Some prosecutions were likewise entered for the sale of adulterated milk. This constituted the work of the bureau since the beginning of the present year, so far as the adulteration of foodstuffs is concerned. It is not the desire of the Bureau or of its agents to prosecute anybody; nevertheless when the laws are violated it becomes the unpleasant duty of those sworn to see that they are enforced to do the unpleasant work of bringing the violators to justice.

The special agents have over 5,000 licensed stores to look over, as well as many investigations which must be made, owing to complaints which are transmitted to them from the Harrisburg office.

The Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, has uncovered a deplorable condition in different sections of the Commonwealth brought about by the shipment from New York State of large quantities of syrup containing both saccharin and sulphur dioxide. The syrups are used in the manufacture of non-alcoholic drinks instead of sugar, and have been shipped from Rochester, New York, and other places. Every State agency as well as the Federal Government has been invoked to stamp out the menace.

The syrups containing saccharin and sulphur dioxide have been shipped into Harrisburg, Tamaqua, Sunbury, Berwick, Bloomsburg, Hazleton, Shamokin, Wilkes-Barre, Scranton and other localities.

Several hundred prosecutions have been ordered and warrants served with more to follow.

Director James Foust of the Bureau of Foods has called upon Dr. Edward Martin, State Commissioner of Health, asking that an embargo be placed on bottlers and dealers selling and dispensing non-alcoholic drinks containing syrup sweetened and preserved with saccharin and sulphur dioxide. Mr. Foust has sought the co-operation of the State Police and the Company located near Wilkes-Barre has been directed to render all the assistance possible when called upon by the agents of the Bureau. In addition, the Bureau of Foods, has asked Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, Washington, D. C., to seize all the doped syrups containing saccharin and sulphur dioxide. Dr. Alsberg notified the Bureau that the matter will receive his immediate attention. The special agents and chemists throughout the State are devoting their entire time in order to break up the unlawful practice of some bottlers and vendors of soda fountains who are selling their beverages containing saccharin and sulphur dioxide.

HOW ANYBODY CAN PRESERVE EGGS TILL NEXT SPRING.

PUT THEM AWAY NOW IN WATER GLASS. THEY WILL BE GOOD TILL NEXT MARCH FOR OMELETS, UNTIL NOVEMBER FOR SOFT BOILING, UNTIL DECEMBER FOR FRYING. CAN BE PRESERVED IN CROCKS CONTAINING EIGHTEEN DOZEN FOR VERY LITTLE MONEY.

The United States Department of Agriculture has issued to housewives a suggestion that during the early summer they should preserve eggs in a solution of water glass. Since more and more retailers are coming to do this also, a reproduction of the Government's directions as to how the water glass process can be used should be useful to the trade. It is claimed that eggs in the shell can be preserved perfectly, at least for six months, and that in the early fall at least they can be sold and used in competition with cold storage eggs.

The following is taken from the Government's instructions:

In the first place, the eggs must be fresh, preferably not more than two or three days old. This is the reason why it is much more satisfactory to put away eggs produced in one's own chicken yard.

Infertile eggs are best if they can be obtained.

The shells must be clean. Washing an egg with a solid shell lessens its keeping quality. The protective gelatinous covering over the shell is removed by water, and when this is gone the egg spoils rapidly.

The shells also must be free from even the tiniest crack. One cracked egg will spoil a large number of sound eggs when packed in water glass.

Earthenware crocks are good containers. The crocks must be clean and sound. Scald them and let them cool completely before use. A crock holding six gallons will accommodate eighteen dozens of eggs and about twenty-two pints of solution. Too large crocks are not desirable, since they increase the liability of breaking some of the eggs and spoiling the entire batch.

It must be remembered that the eggs on the bottom crack first and that those in the bottom of the crocks are the last to be removed for use. Eggs can be put up in smaller crocks and the eggs put in the crock first should be used first in the household.

"Water glass" is known to the chemist as sodium silicate. It can be purchased by the quart from druggists or poultry supply men. It is a pale yellow, odorless, syrupy liquid. It is diluted in the proportion of one part of silicate to nine parts of distilled water, rain water or other water. In any case, the water should be boiled and then allowed to cool. Half fill the vessel with this solution and place the eggs in it, being careful not to crack them. The eggs can be added a few at a time until the container is filled. Be sure to keep about two inches of water glass above the eggs. Cover the crock and place it in the coolest place available, from which the crock will not have to be moved. Inspect the crock from time to time and replace any water that has evaporated with cool boiled water.

When the eggs are to be used, remove them as desired, rinse in clean cold water and use immediately.

Eggs preserved in water glass can be used for soft boiling or poaching up to November. Before boiling such eggs, prick a tiny hole in the large end of the shell with a needle to keep them from cracking. They are satisfactory for frying until about December. From that time until the end of the usual storage period—that is, until March—they can be used for omelettes, scrambled eggs, custards, cakes and general cookery. As the eggs age, the white becomes thinner and is harder to beat. The yolk membrane becomes more delicate and it is correspondingly difficult to separate the whites from the yolks. Sometimes the white of the egg is tinged pink after very long keeping in water glass. This is due, probably, to a little iron which is in the sodium silicate, but which apparently does not injure the egg for food purposes.

NEW DATE SET FOR LABELING GINGER ALE.

The date for beginning proceedings, under the Federal Food and Drugs Act, against ginger ale containing Capsicum or other ginger substitutes not stated upon the label has been extended to January 1, 1921, the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, has announced. The date previously was set as March 16, 1920. The statement follows:

"In a press notice, issued March 13, 1920, the Bureau of Chemistry stated that shipments of ginger ale, both interstate and import, made on or after March 16, 1920, and not labeled in accordance with Food Inspection Decision No. 177 would be actively proceeded against under Sections 10 and 11 of the Federal Food and Drugs Act. Food Inspection Decision 177, issued August 20, 1918, requires the presence of Capsicum (red pepper), Pepper nigrum (black pepper) and A. melegueta (grains of paradise), etc., in ginger ale to be stated on the label.

"Since Food Inspection Decision No. 177 was published in the leading bottling trade journals and was otherwise widely distributed, the officials of the Bureau of Chemistry considered that bottlers of ginger ale had opportunity to be fully informed regarding its provisions. However, representations have been made to the effect that quite a number of bottlers, especially those who have recently begun the manufacture of ginger ale, were not familiar with the regulations and that seizure of interstate shipments and refusal of entry in the case of foreign shipments would work an undue hardship on them. In the circumstances, it has been decided to extend the date on which proceedings under Section 10 and 11 of the Federal Food and Drugs Act will be begun from March 16, 1920, to January 1, 1921."

"The Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture," says Secretary Meredith, "authorizes the statement that it has met with a gratifying degree of co-operation on the part of packers of ripe olives in improving methods to such an extent that danger from botulinus poisoning in future packs will be eliminated. Five groups of deaths traced to poison produced by the organism known as Bacillus botulinus have occurred in New York city, Detroit, Mich., Canton, O., Memphis, Tenn., and Kalispell, Mont. All of these cases were due to the consumption of ripe olives. No fatalities have been traced to green olives.

"Very extensive investigations have been made by scientists from the Bureau of Chemistry with the co-operation of the packers and the packers have also employed specialists to study the causes of botulinus poisoning and the precautions which should be employed to prevent further difficulty. The experts agree that the trouble is not inherent in the type of container used. Whether the olives be packed in glass jars or in tin cans they may be rendered absolutely safe if proper precautions are taken to prevent the infection with bacteria during handling and if the packages when filled are sterilized at a sufficient temperature and for a sufficient period of time. It is entirely practicable, says the specialists, to sterilize both glass containers and tin cans at a temperature high enough to insure absolute sterilization.

Unfortunately some packs of ripe olives put up in glass as well as some in tin during past seasons were not prepared with all the precautions now known to be essential and were not sterilized at a sufficiently high temperature and some of these goods in glass were responsible for the fatalities. It is probable that of all the ripe olives on the market but an extremely small number actually contained Bacillus botulinus. Of more than 2,000 individual packages collected and examined in the Bureau of Chemistry but eight were found to contain Bacillus botulinus, and seven of these were from the output of one manufacturer and from one batch of his output. In addition to these eight, the bureau has examined samples of some of the olives responsible for the fatalities and has also found Bacillus botulinus in these specimens.

"Since there is a possibility of danger from any ripe olive which has been insufficiently sterilized the Bureau of Chemistry has suggested to the industry that all ripe olives in glass or in tin wherever located be carefully inspected and that any which show the slightest degree of decomposition be destroyed. It has further suggested that all ripe olives which have not been processed at a sufficiently high temperature be returned to the packers for immediate reprocessing at a sufficient temperature to insure complete sterilization.

"With few exceptions the olive packers have most heartily fallen in with all suggestions made in the interest of the public safety and by mutual agreement entered into by practically all of the packers they are now taking steps to withdraw from the market all ripe olives in glass containers which have not been sterilized at a sufficient temperature. Similar steps are being taken by some of the packers in the case of minced olive relishes in view of the fact that one death due to the consumption of such a product has been reported.

"While concerted action to remove ripe olives packed in tin and processed at a low temperature has not been taken by the packers the fact that spoilage in tin has so consistently resulted in making a 'swell' out of the can constitutes a warning to the purchaser which is not often disregarded. There is no reason to anticipate danger from properly packed and processed ripe olives whether they be packed in tin or glass containers."

AN OFFICIAL STATEMENT CONCERNING BOTULINUS.

Ripe olives have been restored to favor. It is again safe to eat them, according to Government experts. The appetizing delicacy which, by reason of a few instances of imperfect packing, was brought into temporary disfavor all over the United States, has been officially restored to its place at the table and epicures may breath a sigh of satisfaction. Incidentally, the Bacillus botulinus, that tiny organism responsible for the ripe olive's undeserved loss of popularity, has been utterly routed and destroyed, and, henceforth, must seek other fields.

Secretary Meredith, of the Department of Agriculture, in making public the result of a thorough investigation by Government chemists of cases of poisoning due to the eating of ripe olives, said the trouble was not due to the containers in which they are packed but to isolated cases of inadequate sterilization. The chemists found, he said, that it was possible to sterilize completely both glass jars and tin cans. To eliminate all possible future trouble, he said, the packers have adopted the department's recommendation that the olives be subjected to not less than 240 degrees of heat to prevent the possibility of danger to the consumer. This increased sterilization, it is said, in no way effects the flavor or edibility of the relish.

Owing to prejudice, due to the publicity given cases of poisoning from eating ripe olives, according to the packers, the ripe olive packing industry has been practically destroyed, the demand having fallen off 95 per cent. So widespread was this prejudice that the consumption of green olives was similarly reduced although no fatalities were traced to the use of them. It is believed that the action of the Department of Agriculture in discovering that the cause of poisoning was not due to either tin cans or glass jars, and in uniting the packers in a co-operative movement to standardize their product by absolutely safe methods of sterilization, will restore the olive industry to its former position in American trade.

SUGGESTIONS TO DAIRYMEN.

You are engaged in an occupation which carries with it more or less responsibility which should be borne in mind by your employees, as well as yourself. Babies and children unknowingly rely on you to produce an article which is perfectly pure and safe at all times. The ten suggestions found below are given to assist you to assume the responsibility.

1. KEEP THE COW'S FLANKS AND UDDER FREE FROM DIRT AND MANURE. This is probably the most important single precaution that you can take. More dirt gets into milk from this source than from all other sources combined.

2. WIPE THE UDDER WITH A MOIST CLOTH BEFORE MILKING. This little chore will take about ten seconds of time to each animal but the difference in the quality of milk produced is more than sufficient to pay for the time spent.

3. USE A SMALL-TOP MILK PAIL. The importance of the small-top pail cannot be over estimated. It has been tried and proved satisfactory and practical.

4. USE OUTING FLANNEL OR A "DR. CLARK" COTTON PAD STRAINER. The use of cheese cloth or a wire mesh strainer is a mistake and a false security, which should and can be remedied at once.

5. STERILIZE ALL MILK UTENSILS WITH SCALDING WATER OR STEAM. INVERT THEM ON RACKS OR STAKES WHEN NOT IN USE. RINSE WITH CLEAN WATER BEFORE USING. Proper care of milk utensils is necessary to insure a grade of milk which is acceptable to the market milk trade.

6. DISPOSE OF ALL TUBERCULOUS CATTLE. Figures collected from all over the United States show that from 5 to 30 per cent. of all dairy cattle are afflicted with tuberculosis. Have you any tuberculous cattle in your herd?

7. KEEP YOUR STABLE CLEAN. IT SHOULD BE WHITE-WASHED AND THE CEILING TIGHT FITTING AND KEPT WELL BRUSHED. DON'T ALLOW MANURE TO ACCUMULATE. It is impossible to produce clean milk in a dirty stable. That fact is plainly evident to anybody who has ever worked on a dairy farm.

8. MILK WITH CLEAN HANDS. SOAP, WATER AND A TOWEL SHOULD BE CONVENIENT TO THE MILKERS.

9. AVOID WETTING THE HANDS WHILE MILKING. Wet hand milking is a filthy habit which should be discouraged. It also causes sore and chapped teats with a resulting irritation and partial loss of milk flow.

10. COOL THE MILK TO 60° OR BELOW IMMEDIATELY AFTER MILKING. A tank or aerator is best suited for this purpose. The use of a dairy thermometer in this connection is advisable. The "wash tub method" of cooling is absolutely inadequate and sooner or later will cause financial loss.

You will notice, Mr. Milk Producer, that most of the points mentioned above concern METHODS which require no money expenditures but can be adopted immediately. We urge you, for the sake of hundreds of babies and children, to carefully consider and then adopt them.

FOOD POISONING.

BY W. L. DODD.

Assistant Director of Sanitation and Hygiene, Pease Laboratories,
New York.

Man learned that menace lurked in certain foods through bitter experience. He soon found that certain flesh foods must be avoided. A brilliant hued fruit attracted his eye to the qualms of his stomach. Many of the fungi were tempting, luscious; several proved fatal. Usage drove home the lesson that certain foods were palatable—others hazardous.

He found food could be preserved by simple processes as drying, smoking or salting, that food which had been heated kept better than the raw rations. Gradually he attained a confidence in cooked food as a deterrent of illness following the meal. Even heat, however, he learned was not an absolute bulwark. Food poisoning, still unfathomable, occasionally occurred.

It was not until just previous to the inauguration of Abraham Lincoln that the ptomaine theory of explanation was promoted. A few years later, an apparent relationship was observed between food poisoning outbreaks and a septicaemic condition of the animals whose flesh was consumed. In 1888 the role of bacteria as causative factors in food poisoning outbreaks was established, a germ of intestinal type being isolated by a German investigator, from the human victim and the beef eaten. Since that time, similar or closely related germs have been isolated from other German, and English outbreaks, also the eaten foods, firmly establishing the alliance of certain bacteria, infected food and illness.

Today infected food is recognized as the most important cause of food poisoning. Other sources are known—an individual idiosyncrasy to specific foods; presence of harmful chemicals in food; and foods inherently poisonous—but they are perhaps so relatively immaterial as to need but brief mention.

Food idiosyncrasy affects but a limited number of persons. They have found by experience that they cannot eat certain proteid foods, as egg albumin, cereals, cheese, tomatoes, pork, fish and shell-fish. Whenever an attempt is made they are acutely afflicted with a bloated itching skin eruption or some gastro-intestinal distress. This peculiar idiosyncrasy to certain foods has usually existed since early childhood, and may be avoided by careful selection of food or medical treatment.

The use of chemicals and preservations in food is a question which has aroused endless controversy. On the one side the defender claiming conservation through prevention of food spoilage; on the other the equally vituperative antagonist anathematizing their use in no uncertain manner. Out of this turmoil the usage of a limited number of preservatives has emerged.

Lead chromate was used formerly, to impart an enticing color to confectionery. Other poisonous metals have also been used in the past, as well as colors in whose manufacture poisonous minerals as mercury or arsenic, were employed. Now the addition of colors is limited to prescribed coal tar dyes, generally accepted as harmless. Tin has been indicated as a metal absorbed by canned foods. Modern progress has made this source of little consequence except perhaps for acid foods as various fruits, especially those stored for long periods. Maintenance of food in lead glazed earthenware is a possible source of metallic poisoning. Modern spraying of fruits and vegetables with insecticides, coupled with and subsequent inadequate washing, bears the potential danger that arsenic or other metals may be infested with food.

Illness from inherently poisonous foods, aside from certain varieties of mushrooms, is of little danger in this country. The roe of certain fish during special seasons is claimed to be productive of misfortune. Toxic properties have been claimed for cheese and sprouted potatoes.

While idiosyncrasy, metallic poisons and inherently poisonous foods, must be considered, extensive outbreaks of food poisoning are almost invariably caused by infectious bacteria or toxins elaborated by bacteria in food. Hence food may contain hazardous germs, poisonous toxins, or both. The popular fallacy that ptomaines cause widespread food poisoning, is not based on a secure foundation.

Putrefactive changes as a cause of illness, early obtained acceptance, especially when science proudly pointed to sickness among animals injected with extracts of putrid meat. Feeding experiments, the usual way food is consumed, have been few and unsatisfactory. More recently, the chemist has demonstrated certain facts which indicate that ptomaines rarely, if ever, cause food poisoning.

Careful research showed that when food decomposes, it is not a simple process, at one moment wholesome the next, putrid. Gradual changes occur, which assault and rend the wholesome food into new products, gases are given off, the food emits a carious odor, and we speak of it as tainted. During the very last stages—and only then—of this putrescence, the ptomaines form. In other words, ptomaines mature only when the meat or food product is of such fetor as to insure its rejection.

Ptomaines may result from the action of very guiltless germs; on the other hand, a virulent disease germ might have little or no aptitude to evolve a ptomaine from food. There is no trustworthy evidence that ptomaines are toxic when swallowed. Time is required for ptomaines to form, by which interval the food is obviously too nauseous to eat. It is unlikely that ptomaines are a substantial force in producing extensive poisoning.

Bacteria, or their toxic products, cause a large majority of food poisoning outbreaks. Bacterial toxins differ in many ways from the toxic ptomaines. Bacterial toxins usually cause acute toxemia when swallowed. They seldom produce any change in the smell or looks of the food, and they are caused only by specific disease germs—each germ with its own toxin.

It is generally accepted that the germs of many of the infectious bacteria of which the typhoid bacillus is one, are locked within the cell wall of the germ and are only set free when the germ invades the human body with subsequent rupture of the cell wall. On the other hand, it is considered that a few other germs, for example, the diphtheria bacillus attacks human tissues, or other suitable nutritive sources, and develop soluble toxins outside the germ cell wall. Thus certain germs are only toxic after they enter the human body, while other bacteria preform toxins before ingestion. Either the bacteria are ingested with the food, later forming toxins or disease in the human body, or toxins are accumulated in the food outside the body. In this latter group the botulism poison befalls.

Botulism may occur through the eating of ripe olives, flesh foods and vegetables. The evidence against fruits is not established. Botulism is a rare cause of death. The bulk of the reported cases have occurred in California and have been caused by foods home canned in that State. Until recently there was little indication that botulism terminated from factory canned products. Of fifty or more epidemics, but two or three have been suspected as possibly caused by factory packs. The more adequate facilities for sterilization probably explains the better showing of factory "packs." It is not unlikely that the type of food container—its ability to absorb heat, is a factor in the sterilization of the contained food contents. Death results from a poison formed in the food—outside the human body—by the growth of bacillus botulinus, a resistant spore forming germ. The toxin will only develop in stored moist food, kept dark, free from air, and held at moderately warm room temperature. Ordinary cooking process destroys the toxin. It is unlikely that toxin will form in dehydrated—highly acid—salty foods—or those preserved in syrups of the ordinary strength.

Botulism although very fatal may be viewed as a relatively rare source of food poisoning if we consider the numerous cases of intestinal distress, many of which are caused by contamination of food.

Contamination of food with bacteria, with subsequent illness or disease developed in the human body following its eating, is generally considered as associated with members of a germ family broadly known as the colon-typhoid group. At the one extreme is the Bacillus coli a natural denizen of the human and animal bowel and of the soil, at the other the Bacillus typhosus consorting only with a diseased plight of man. Midway between these two types, a sort of half brother to each, is the Bacillus paratyphosus, and similar type organisms, some of which are found in the human bowel, others in the animal alimentary canal. The paratyphoid germs are usually less malignant than the typhoid germs, and inhabit the bowel less frequently than the Bacillus coli. Members of this paratyphoid group have been isolated as a source of food poisoning, especially by European bacteriologists.

However, paratyphoid group germs possibly do not cause or explain all outbreaks. It is not improbable that other bacteria not generally considered as infectious, may from time to time, produce gastro-intestinal disturbance of varying severity. Again, similar germs in different localities may vary in their virulence. The botulum organisms appears to be more common to California, at least, more cases of the disease have been reported from that state. Can we assume that other germs possibly because of environmental conditions, or other factors, may be more frequent in some localities, and either practically extinct, seldom reported, or of materially lessened virulence in the other sections of the country or world?

In the United States, food poisoning, aside from that associated with acute contagions, does not seem to have been so vigorously investigated as in the European countries. The results of England and German investigators point to infection of food with various members of the paratyphoid group as frequent causes of extensive outbreaks. In this country, Jordan collected reports of food poisoning outbreaks in the United States, through a press clipping bureau, for two years, from October 1913, until October 1915. A group of 1,032 instances was collected, the major number being group or family outbreaks. The bacteriology of these outbreaks was not presented. In his book, "Food Poisoning," Jordan lists but one well studied food poisoning outbreak occasioned by the paratyphoid bacillus in the United States, infected pie crust from a restaurant. Can it be assumed from the apparent paucity of data regarding infection of food in this country by the paratyphoid bacillus, that this organism is a relatively unimportant source of American food poisoning outbreaks, or can the cause be more accurately assigned to inadequate reporting of outbreaks and insufficient bacteriological investigation?

Savage, in his "Food Poisoning and Food Infections," records fifty-three scrutinized English outbreaks, of which forty-three were proved to have been caused by food infected with a member of the paratyphoid family.

Meat is a food frequently implicated in outbreaks, especially pork or beef. The flesh of the sheep is said to rarely cause infection. Other foods, such as milk and its derivatives, including ice cream have been held responsible for outbreaks. Vegetables and cereals have been less frequently accused, fruits rarely.

Food poisoning outbreaks may be due to direct contamination of the product by infectious bacteria with subsequent illness, following its eating. Or the source of infection might not be as direct. For example, utensils may be contaminated with hazardous bacteria, later polluting wholesome food with which the utensil comes in contact. Flies and diseased body evacuations may become entangled to the later besmearing of food. Thus foods may be dangerous because of direct contact, or indirectly, through contact with a previously contaminated source. Certain foods, as milk, can be perilous either by a direct or indirect path of contagion. Typhoid fever, septic sore throat and diphtheria could cause human suffering by either of these pestilential routes. While milk may transport several of the contagious diseases, it is probably rare for flesh foods to effectuate other than intestinal infections.

Direct contact of food with the infected dung of man, or diseased discharges of animals very likely accounts for a number of food poisoning outbreaks. The use of diseased animal flesh is another to-be-considered factor. In fact, a recent worker has reported paratyphoid germs from diseased body organs of animals, but he did not find them in the bowels.

The paratyphoid family, which English workers have frequently indicted as means of food poisoning, are not normal dwellers in the human bowel. They occur only during sharp bowel agitation or the subsequent convalescence—even up to the stage of apparent health. Not all the lineage of this paratyphoid family are malevolent. Neither is it clearly established whether the bacterial cells of this family group from toxin outside the cell wall, or whether it is sealed within the cell and is loosed only when the germ wall ruptures. The cell bodies, or germs, are exterminated by a par-boiling temperature sufficiently applied. Their wrought toxins are reported as surpassingly heat resistant. In this manner, a member of the paratyphoid family might invade food, be heated and destroyed, yet the food still produce distress when eaten because of the heat defying toxins.

Contamination of human origin may be imputed to slovenly habits and heedless fingers. This may be exemplified by an English outbreak springing from the kitchen of a large institution. Fish purchased from the same source was served in the institution, and was also bought by the village housewives for their tables. Following the eating of the fish in the institution twenty-eight cases of food poisoning broke out, while no illness was evidenced among the villagers. It was manifest that the fish was infected in the institution. Investigation evolved that the fish had been sliced, floured and cooked in the kitchen by a young woman. A sample of her blood was withdrawn—tested. It showed the presence of a germ from the paratyphoid group. In her faeces the same germ was ferreted out. Comparison proved it to be identical with the germ segregated from a body organ of a person who had eaten the fish and died.

Negligence on the part of institutions to provide convenient and adequate washing facilities may result in just such outbreaks, as the one described. Lacking water or the other necessities for washing and drying the hands, or soiled, squalid washrooms, or their location in an out-of-the-way inaccessible corner, may easily send smeared fingers into the kitchen from the toilet, later to handle or serve food.

While in this intestinal outbreak the fish was directly infected, meat may be diseased in itself or splashed with the diseased discharges of an animal and when eaten cause food poisoning. Other similar sources of contamination also occur. Several of the animals used for food are known to suffer various ailments caused in whole or part, by some member of the paratyphoid family. An epidemic fever of swine, a septicæmia and bowel inflammation of beef animals, and epidemic diseases of certain birds, are considered the result of infection with a paratyphoid group organism. It is possibly significant that the germs have been found frequently with diseased conditions of pork and beef animals, and that these flesh foods are those commonly incriminated in food poisoning outbreaks.

Although animals used for flesh foods are sources of food poisoning, smaller members of the same family, not used for food, may be considered with suspicion.

Rats and mice may be a means of contaminating food with the paratyphoid group germs. Mouse typhoid is a well known disease of rodents. The infected rats pass the disease from sick to well. There is possibly another source of transmission, the bacterial rat poison. The specific germ has been isolated and is put up commercially in various forms for distribution around rat infected premises, for rodent destruction. The opinion has been advanced that mouse typhoid is not fatal for man. Outbreaks in man from accidental use of bacterial rat poisons are reported nevertheless. In one instance, a Japanese outbreak, a wooden vessel was utilized to mix mouse typhoid virus with warm water. Inadvertently the vessel was set away without washing, and later used to hold some cooked vegetables served as part of a meal. Two days after eating the cooked vegetables thirty persons were attacked—three died. Mouse typhoid germs were recovered from the body organs of the fatal cases and the vegetables served.

Rats may recuperate from infection with mouse typhoid and shelter the germs for long periods. These rodents often have abundant opportunity to pollute food. They should not be tolerated around a food manufacturing or serving institution, nor should their destruction be attempted by sowing the prepared virus broadcast around the premises.

There is much which indicates that raw foods or those inadequately cooked are perhaps the most frequent sources of food poisoning. Heat destroys germs with which it has contact. However, cooked food may instigate food poisoning. There are two reasons for this, the reputed resistance of the toxins of the paratyphoid group to heat, withstanding as they are said to do, a temperature of 250 degrees F., and the failure of the heat to thoroughly penetrate and permeate the food bulk. Furthermore, certain foods, as meat, are poor conductors of heat. Tests have been made of the temperatures of fair sized pieces of meat exposed to varying cooking customs. Grilling gave a temperature of 130 degrees F., roasting 150 degrees F., and boiling 185 degrees F. All of these temperatures are below 212 degrees F., that of boiling water. A six pound ham was dropped into cold water and put on the range. The water boiled when the temperature of the ham was but 80 degrees F. After two hours cooking, the temperature of different parts of the ham ranged from 115 degrees F. to 150 degrees F.

Meat is not the only food which cooking sometimes fails to make safe. At a public dinner in California the cook who prepared the spaghetti, was a typhoid carrier. Nearly a hundred people who ate this contaminated food, came down with typhoid fever. A dish of the food was made up in the laboratory, following undeviatingly the procedure of the carrier who prepared the infected sustenance. Typhoid cultures were mixed throughout the food mass and the vessel baked until visually over-cooked. The interior did not even attain a pasteurizing temperature and typhoid germs were readily extricated less than three inches below the well browned surface.

The features of bacterial food poisoning outbreaks, apart from botulism or those caused by acute contagions are much alike. There is a period, frequently about a day, from time the food is eaten until the victim becomes ill. The interval varies, brief, as a few moments, sometimes several days. The abrupt lapses indicate illness from a toxin contained in the food, just as prostration rapidly follows the drinking of poison. Longer interims suggest germ infection, time being required for toxins to be elaborated within the human body following the eating of the germ contaminated food. The onset in any case is sudden. The common symptoms are vomiting, diarrhoea, and excruciating gripe of the bowels. The majority of those who eat become ill. The number of deaths is usually low.

The prevention of bacterial food poisonous outbreaks is not simple. There are many ramifications by which food may be contaminated. But these infection paths should be blocked, or at least obstructed.

Food should be drawn from a healthy source. For example, vegetables from unpolluted soil, meat from sound animals. The human operatives should be healthily sound, painstakingly probed to weed out carriers of contagion. Toilets should be provided and every inviting facility extended for maintaining clean hands. The premises and processing operations should be under the sanitary scrutiny of skilled investigators—competent to do more than condemn filth, but able to dig out the hidden health menaces. The tools and utensils which touch the food should be wholesomely clean and sterile. Rodents should be exterminated from the premises. Food which so permits should be thoroughly and evenly cooked, at a temperature sufficient to destroy any contained bacterial toxins or bacteria.

Many foods could probably be brought to a point of sterilization only with considerable difficulty and then perhaps at the risk of impairing their flavor and appearance. The spaghetti outbreak is illustrative of this point. For such foods every effort should be expended to prevent their contact with soiled fingers or any other possible source of contagion. Following cooking, food should either be rapidly sealed within its containers, or immediately refrigerated.

But a few decades ago the consumer slaughtered his own meat, prepared his own food, or else purchased it from a neighbor—whose habits he knew. As the population increased, food resources were pushed farther and farther back. A constant supply of fresh food, or in fact food at all, is becoming more and more linked with its transportation. The recent labor difficulties clearly demonstrated how close is the margin between food and famine, for the American public. Today food traveling to the ultimate consumer frequently originates thousands of miles distant. The consumer now relies on the packer or distributor for the habits of the preparer of his food. Hence, good sanitation is a live issue, and one demanding respect. The ultimate goal, is certified food.—The American Food Journal.

HOW A FOSSIL EGG MANAGED TO SURVIVE COUNTLESS AGES.

A prospector examining the stones in the Gila River in Arizona came upon a water worn pebble four or five inches in diameter. He cracked off a fragment with his pick and discovered a fossil egg inside. The specimen came into the hands of a gentleman in California, who brought it to the attention of scientific experts.

The chief point of interest from a scientific standpoint is the fact that the contents of the egg had been converted into a bituminous substance resembling asphalt, thus supporting the hypothesis that bitumen is derived from animal remains.

The egg is quite large—as large as that of a duck or goose—and resembling most closely the egg of a cormorant. It is so perfectly preserved as to show that it must have been completely embedded very shortly after it was laid in the substance that afterward consolidated into limestone. Thus we have a representation of an event that happened thousand and thousands of years ago.

A bird of the size of a cormorant or goose laid this precious egg, which by some mischance tumbled into the water, or at all events into the soft ooze of which limestone is formed, with sufficient force to become completely embedded in the ooze and thus protected. For countless years this ooze continued to be formed on top, and at last the whole became consolidated into limestone. Then the limestone was lifted from its watery bed by volcanic or other action and became a portion of a mountain range. Then erosion began. Through the agencies of frost and rain, sunshine and cold, fragments of limestone were broken off, until at last the egg was reached and the fragments containing it fell into one of the gullies that feed the Gila River.

There in flood time it was rolled over and over, amid a multitude of other stones, small and large, until all its angles were rubbed off and it became a water worn pebble in a mountain stream, moving downward when the floods came in sufficient volume to stir it from its resting place, and then a prospector, searching for gold or other mineral, found it and cracked it with his geologic pick, exposing one end of the egg.

'Twas a wonderful history. But still more wonderful is the thought of the thousands and thousands of years that must have elapsed between the day when the egg fell into the water and became embedded and the day when it next met the light, as a fossil, in the hands of man.

EXAMINATION OF FROZEN EGG PRODUCTS.

Food Specialists Standardize Technical Methods for Testing Suitability of Frozen Eggs for Food.

Technical methods for the examination of frozen whole eggs, frozen yolky mixtures, frozen egg yolk, and frozen white of egg, in order to determine with certainty those that are suitable for food, have been standardized and published by the specialists of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, who have made an extended investigation of the best methods for handling eggs and egg products from the point of production through the channels of commerce to the consumer.

Large quantities of shell eggs arrive at buying centers in a cracked or broken condition, or otherwise unsuitable for sale as whole shell eggs. It is the commercial practice to break such of these eggs as may be fit for food and freeze the yolks and whites either together or separately in large or small cans for use by commercial bakers and large hotels. So extensive has this business become that 19,286,396 pounds of frozen egg products were held in storage on January 1, 1920. Eggs which are unsuitable for food should be separated out for technical purposes, such as tanning. Unless care is taken in separating the the good eggs from the partly spoiled eggs, some off-grade eggs are likely to get into the cans with the good eggs. If the proportion of spoiled eggs present in a mixture is appreciable they may be detected by the sense of smell and taste, but if the proportion is comparatively small, chemical, bacteriological, and microscopical methods must be employed. Contamination may also result from insanitary practices in handling the utensils and eggs.

The specialists have developed reliable methods for the chemical, bacteriological, and microscopical examination of egg products which have been frozen in order that spoilage, or the organisms which produce it, or the use of spoiled eggs in a product, may be detected with certainty. The methods can be used only by trained chemists and bacteriologists, since they are highly technical. The bulletin will be of interest to Federal, State, and municipal food-control officials and to commercial bacteriologists and chemists who are called upon to examine frozen egg products.

The results of the investigation are published in United States Department of Agriculture Bulletin No. 846, entitled "Examination of Frozen Egg Products and Interpretation of Results," which may be had upon application to the department, Washington, D. C.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING APRIL, 1920.

Upon information made, 103 prosecutions were ordered during the month of April for various violations of the food laws of the Commonwealth. They were for the following offenses:

Under the Ice Cream Act one resident of Venango county, was prosecuted for selling vanilla ice cream low in butter fat.

One resident of Philadelphia was charged with selling frozen eggs unfit for food.

One citizen of Beaver county who had no license was prosecuted for selling oleomargarine for butter.

Two prosecutions were ordered under the vinegar law, one for selling cider vinegar distilled, low in acetic acid and colored with caromel, and one for the sale of cider vinegar consisting of partly distilled vinegar, colored with caramel. The offenses were committed in Jefferson and Philadelphia counties.

There were twenty-four violations of the non-alcoholic drinks act, the offenses having been committed in Blair, Lehigh, Luzerne, Montgomery, Northumberland and Philadelphia counties. They were as follows: For selling grape soda containing saccharin, 2; lemon soda containing saccharin, 6; raspberry soda containing saccharin, 2; cherry soda containing saccharin, 2; soda containing saccharin, 1; birch beer containing saccharin, 2; imitation birch beer containing saccharin, 1; root beer containing saccharin, 1; strawberry pop containing saccharin, 1; orange pop containing saccharin, 2; imitation orangeade containing saccharin, 1; orange cloud containing saccharin, 1; King Cole containing saccharin, 1; cherry crash artificially colored and not made from cherry fruit exclusively, 1.

Twenty-five violations of the food act were reported, as follows: Sale of codfish containing added boric acid, 6; fish containing added boric acid, 1; Dutch cake colored with coal tar color, 2; pound cake colored with coal tar color, 3; butter containing an excess of water, 2; pork loins unfit for food, 1; flour containing nitrous acid, 1; dried peaches containing sulphur dioxide, 3; dried apricots containing sulphur dioxide, 1; chocolate cherries containing added sulphur dioxide and colored with coal tar dye, 2; chocolate cherries candy containing added sulphur dioxide and colored with coal tar dye, 1; chocolate coated cherries containing sulphur dioxide, 1; Keystone brand cherries containing sulphur dioxide, 1. These prosecutions were brought in Beaver, Blair, Bucks, Clearfield, Jefferson, Lawrence, Montgomery, Northumberland, Philadelphia and Venango counties.

CLEAN UP. WHY?

It pays to do business in a clean, neat, tidy store.

First. It is a sanitary thing to do.

Chasing the dirt is absolutely necessary to avoid danger of contamination. Where there is no filth there are no flies.

Women are your best buyers—and they will notice cleanliness and sanitary conditions. If there is a nice clean look and smell about your store both the women and the sanitary inspector will notice it. Therefore use hot water, soap, elbow grease, disinfectants and paint or calcimine or both.

Second. It is seasonable. Before the flies and dust begin to fly—when the street cleaning and house cleaning are in full swing, then is the time to store-clean. The marks of the Winter's grime and dirt are everywhere to be seen—go after them—banish them.

Third. It is good advertising. You could win a bet that certain storekeepers in your town will not clean up. We will wager that they are not the livest up-to-datest merchants in town. Suppose you go so far with your store cleaning that folks begin to say, "That man Jones is a fiend for cleaning up—his store is like my wife's pantry. Clean as a whistle." When that kind of talk goes about town you are getting better advertising than you can buy in a newspaper.

Fourth. Cleaning up pays. It eliminates danger of losses due to dirt. The pests that breed in dirt cannot breed where dirt is not. Your clean-up suggests to other people that they clean up—and you sell a lot of the material to clean with.

People may not think your prices are lower because you keep a clean store, but they must and will think that they would rather take a chance on your goods than on those that are found in a dirty untidy store.

Clean out that cellar, cart away that pile of rubbish, put paint on that dirty wall. Soap and water and paint are wonderful allies. They annihilate disease germs by the billions.

Private Tips—Clean out the inside of the counter with a hand brush. Germs of various kinds go into the drawers right in the goods themselves. You put them in yourself. You can't see them, but they are there. Get everything out of the counter that will furnish a breeding place, and so prevent trouble.

TRY THIS

Make an inspection of your stock.

Pry into every bin, drawer, corner and crevice.

You have some goods which you have overlooked and forgotten.

You have two or three lots of the same goods open.

You will find more of some things than you ought to have.

If you have a cellar or attic or back room in which goods are stored, get into these places with your two good eyes, plenty of light and the determination to take a loss on whatever is found that should move at once to avoid greater loss.

No man can go carefully through his entire stock without learning some things he ought to know. Inspect everything.

Get back of, underneath and over everything—and get the old and slow and surplus stock out from its hiding place and into cash.

STORY OF THE TOMATO.

The growth of the tomato appetite in the United States and in many other countries of the world is one of the romances of the dining table, and the development of the tomato raising, shipping and packing industry is one of the marvels of the work-a-day world. Up to 1830 the tomato was not used as a food in the United States. It was known as the "love apple," thought to be poisonous, and was grown only as an ornamental plant, but today it is a vegetable of universal popularity, and among the leading commercial crops. Although a few Americans found, about 1830, that the tomato was not poisonous, and that it was palatable raw or cooked, it did not rapidly come into popularity. It was after the close of the American Civil War that it began to come into the esteem of many thousands of Americans and seemed to set out upon its campaign of conquest, which would put it in one form or another, upon nearly every dinner table, both winter and summer.

The tomatoes of the days of one's great-grandmother were very small, about like a cherry, in fact. One of the old varieties was called the cherry or currant tomato, the little red globes growing in clusters and forming very handsome plants for the yard or flower garden. It was highly thought of as a garden ornament, but the thought that the red fruits might be good to eat and that they could be developed into the size of large pears and apples was very slow in coming into men's minds.

The tomato is of South American origin and is described as a "weak stemmed, trailing annual with jagged leaves, resembling the potato in its general aspect." It is a member of the Solanceae or night shade family, one of the members of which is belladonna, or the deadly night shade, a European herb, long known to the medical world as a poisonous plant but useful in pharmacy.

An immense amount of experimentation has been given to the tomato plant for the purpose of improving the bearing capacity and size, shape and solidity of the fruit. The list of the names of varieties would be a very long one, even if they were collected and the number of commercial varieties being cultivated today would be surprising to any one who has only the usual information about the tomato.

HARRISBURG, PENNA.:

BUSINESS FOLKS OF WHOM WE ARE PROUD.

As a rule it is the dishonest dealer, the man who tries to evade our somewhat rigid state food laws, whose doings are reported in the Bulletin from time to time. In every department of human life it is the wicked folks who get the most notoriety. There are millions of virtuous, law-abiding men and women in the world who live and work and love and die without achieving the least bit of notoriety. They love their families, do the work that comes to hand and live honestly in the sight of their neighbors. Seldom do their names get into the news columns, never sensationally.

We have been thinking recently about the great body of manufacturers and distributors and vendors of foodstuffs in the great state of Pennsylvania who are doing their best to provide the right sort of products for the use of the consuming public and who strive scrupulously and successfully to prepare and to vend their wares in obedience to the strict letter as well as the spirit of the law. They never cause the Bureau of Foods any trouble. They pride themselves upon their integrity. They have a just regard for their reputation as manufacturers or distributors of pure food and they strive to do the square thing with the state which protects them and the people who are their patrons.

There are thousands of such men and women in Pennsylvania. They are to be found in all parts of the state. They are naturally anxious to succeed, but they have so high a regard for their reputation as business people and so great a reverence for law that they make constant and scrupulous efforts to produce the best possible article in their line every day in the week. We might name some business folks whose very names are the best possible guarantee of the purity of the products they turn out, but it would be unfair to others who might not be mentioned although quite as deserving. It is a fact that if all who make or supply articles of food or drink were as scrupulously honest as the majority of dealers we might easily get along without food laws or food agents. Unfortunately this ideal condition is not yet with us, although a great advance has been made within the last dozen years.

Let us think sometimes about the honest manufacturers, the upright vendors of life's necessities in the food and drink line. Let us commend them for their sincere and upright conduct. Let us commend their conduct to the imitation of those who for one reason or another have failed to reach their high level. Perhaps the day may come soon when Pennsylvania can point with pride to the complete absence of violations of law among the makers and vendors of food products. Let us work toward that end.

DEALERS OF WHOM WE ARE NOT PROUD.

The statistical and other pages of this Bulletin have told a story almost each month since its first number appeared that has not furnished occasion for either satisfaction or congratulation. From month to month we have been obliged to print figures and facts of another sort going to prove that the present admirable pure food and soft drinks laws were not enacted before they were needed. There has been a wonderful improvement, of course, as contrasted with the beginning of food law administration, an improvement of which the state, the consumers, the manufacturers and the dealers have real occasion to be proud. To this happy condition attention is called elsewhere.

In spite of law, however, in spite of public sentiment, in spite of the responsibility of the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retail vendor, and in spite of the laws, there are still persons in the state who violate our laws, risking the penalty for the greater gain involved in the sale of an inferior quality of goods. Much of the present day adulteration of food is of a harmless nature—that is to say none of the ingredients used is dangerous to human health or life. For instance, the watering of milk does no harm to the consumer. But the milkman or the vendor who resorts to this practice cheats his customer. The purchaser does not get full value for his money; the seller makes an excessive and an unwarranted profit. The same thing is true of watered sausage or of butter with which an excessive volume of water has been mixed. Our laws make it an offense to deceive a purchaser, and very properly.

Others who are consumed by the greed for gain go farther. They prepare articles of food or drink that are pure imitations. They make much use of the coal tar dyes. They employ saccharin instead of sugar, and especially in times of real scarcity in sugar. They prepare and sell alleged substitutes for eggs, a truly absurd proposition, yet such is the gullibility of the average human being that it is by no means difficult to deceive the economical housekeeper. The soft drink industry has offered a fertile field of effort, especially in the poorer districts of the large cities, where constant vigilance is required to enforce law and protect the lives of the children of the poor.

One of the chief duties of the Bureau of Foods is to enforce the laws enacted for the protection of the health of the people. It is by no means a pleasant task, but it is both important and essential. Already much good has been done.

Harrisburg, Pa.,—County cider vinegar, made by the farmers of Pennsylvania, may be sold to the wholesale and retail trade in this state without inspection or permit of any kind. Provided the vinegar has been made from apple juice and contains no added water, drugs or acids, it complies in every way with the pure food laws of the state.

Director James Foust of the Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, this week declared that agents from the larger cider vinegar plants, many of them located outside the state, have been making strenuous efforts to keep the farmers from making and disposing of their own cider vinegar.

These agents have been going up and down the state telling the trade, particularly the small retail dealer, that he runs a risk of violating the food laws of the state by selling cider vinegar made on the farm.

A recent act of the Legislature provides for the interests of the farmers in this particular case. The act provides that there shall be no standard as to solids and acidity for cider vinegar made from apple juice. The act requires, however, that the cask or container of such vinegar shall be marked with the name and address of the person making the cider vinegar. This may be done on any farm, with a set of stencils, or a card containing the information may be attached to the barrel.

Pennsylvania imports great amounts of cider vinegar from New York and Virginia each year. The farmers of Pennsylvania have an excellent opportunity to convert their apples into cider vinegar, realize a good profit and run no risk of running afoul of the prohibition laws. If every excess apple in the state was made into vinegar, the amount would still be insufficient to meet the demand and at the current price of 30 and 35 cents a gallon, cider vinegar returns an excellent investment to the farmer.

HELPING TO ENFORCE LAW.

Among the most active and intelligent of the helpers of the Bureau of Foods during many years have been the housekeepers of the commonwealth. And this has been especially true of those who have been associated in many of the women's clubs. There has been considerable individual action, but the greater part of it has resulted from co-operative discussion which aroused personal action. Discussion in the club, resolutions adopted at the meetings of the club, concerted action concerning some important matters created a sentiment which manufacturers and vendors were not slow to perceive and to act upon.

And yet there is still considerable carelessness among housewives. Some are victims of the demon of cheapness. In such times as these more than ordinary temptations confront those whose chief business it is to husband household receipts in such a way as to make the family income cover the family outgo. When one hears of "a bargain" in foodstuffs one is inclined to accept it. But there never was a time when the cheapest articles of food were the best; usually they have been the most costly in the end. What was true in other days is even truer today. True economy is usually the result of a wise selection.

The housekeeper has helped to secure pure food in the past by familiarizing herself with the names of the most reputable producers and the most dependable dealers. She has helped by acquiring a knowledge of the meaning of the label and by a careful examination of the label on articles of food which bear the label. She can acquaint herself with the requirements of the laws dealing with milk, butter, oleo, eggs, vinegar, and other articles in common use and in daily demand. What the housekeepers of other days did the housekeeper of today may and should do. She owes it to her family to provide for their consumption only pure food.

During the past few years there has been an amazing improvement in the food situation. Most of the foods now on sale in Pennsylvania are free from dangerous preservatives or other ingredients. The efforts of the women and of the agents of the Bureau of Foods, supported by the splendid system of laws dealing with food and soft drinks, as well as the growing conviction of the makers and vendors of food that our laws are wholesome and right, have made the task of householders and others of the present day comparatively light. Let the good work go right on.

FARM AND CITY.

Under the above heading a recent editorial in Hoard's Dairyman takes a decidedly optimistic view of the future of farming. It believes the condition of our times has led us to exaggerate our problems and to view our situation with fear rather than from the basis of facts. The apparent high wages and short hours prevalent in the city have, without doubt, encouraged many farm bred boys and girls to leave the farm. This movement from the rural districts to the city has produced a shortage of labor on the farm. There are those who believe this a calamity and almost irreparable, but we do not view the situation with alarm. When economical forces swing, as they are bound to, in the opposite direction from which they are now operating, the young men and women of the farm will see the advantage of taking up agricultural work.

Most young men who leave the farm will not return to it, but some will see that high wages and short hours are more or less a delusion and that if they are to make any progress in the accumulation of wealth it will require greater effort and a better opportunity for saving than is afforded in many of the positions in the city which now seem to be so attractive. We may have reached the time in our efficiency of production when we can hope to make more than a living on eight hours a day, but it is a noticeable fact that the men and women who have accumulated some wealth have worked many more hours than this every day. Seventy-five cents to $1.25 an hour looks very attractive to the farm boy and eight hours a day appears to him as being a snap. He fails to comprehend that rent, food and clothing are much more important factors in the city than in the country and when he must pay the advanced prices for all these essentials he has very little left, and that which he has left after paying for these necessities is very likely to be spent for the attractions of the city. The eight hours a day labor do not include the time spent going to and from work; in the large cities this means an hour or more every morning and evening.

If the young men and women continue to leave the farm in the future as they have in the past year or two there will be less food produced and the prices will be higher, making it more difficult to earn a living in the city. We do not believe there is any law or regulation that will cause these people to stay on the farm. As sure as night follows day, the unyielding economical law will bring about conditions to keep young people on the farm long before any calamity will come to agriculture.

Let us hope this glowing belief will be ratified and confirmed by the facts of our future history as a nation.

MILK AS A CURE FOR DIGESTIVE TROUBLES.

The virtues of sour milk, or rather some one of the more popular fermented milks, have been advertised far and wide as a cure for certain digestive troubles and as an assurance of long life. This belief is now found by experimental evidence to be well-founded, but there is no occasion to particularly stress the "sour" or "fermented." Professor R. C. Fisher, of the Connecticut College of Agriculture, finds that in human nutrition sweet milk will be quite as valuable for this purpose as sour.

The theory of Metchnikoff, the noted advocate of sour milk, was that the bacillus bulgaricus (one of the lactic acid group) can be planted in the intestine and has the power to destroy harmful bacteria that might otherwise cause putrefaction of the intestinal contents and so bring on various bodily disorders. Later investigators find that where milk, either sweet or sour, made up the principal part of the diet of humans, there was a marked decrease in the decomposition products.

In his experimental work Professor Fisher found that when pathogenic bacteria, such as those causing dysentery and typhoid fever, were introduced into milk containing 1 per cent. lactic acid they were effectively checked and destroyed. Milk fermented with the bulgarian culture usually has this amount of acidity and therefore must be considered safe from infection.

Concerning his experimentation on the relative effect of sweet and sour milk Professor Fisher says in Connecticut Bulletin 104:

"The beneficial effects of milk in the successful treatment of various intestinal diseases, such as typhoid fever, has for some time been known to the medical profession, but not until recently has it been realized that the explanation lay in its ability to change the intestinal flora from the putrefactive type to the bacillus-acidophilus group, the presence of which is associated with a minimum amount of putrefaction and accompanies the general well-being of the individual. Whether bulgarius milk or fresh sweet milk is preferable depends upon conditions. If the subject is constipated the bulgarius milk will prove helpful. On the other hand, some individuals apparently do not tolerate acid milk and in such cases sweet milk is best. Approximately three to four quarts, or even more, should be used daily in half pint quantities taken every hour or two.

"Already the medical profession is using nature's own food, milk, to combat various diseases, and will continue to do so in the future as the importance of the diet and nutrition in the successful combatting of disease is realized."

FEDERAL VERSUS STATE CONTROL.

During the past quarter of a century there has been a pretty steady movement in the direction of increased federal control so that now matters once under the exclusive direction of the states are controlled by officials at the federal capital. There has been a movement in this direction ever since the Civil War decided that this is a nation rather than a loose collection of independent states and the process seems to be accelerated with each passing year.

It was inevitable that efforts should be made to bring about national control of the food problem. The spirit of the times seems to favor the subordination of the states to the control of the nation. That peculiar spirit of jealousy which almost wrecked the American experiment in the beginning, the fear that the federal government would enslave the states, has practically vanished. It is realized that there would be decided advantages in a proper uniformity. If the food and drug business were ruled by a single code instead of by forty-nine the manufacturers and the dealers would be greatly benefited. Most of their difficulties would vanish.

Pennsylvania, we feel sure, would offer no objection to uniformity, even to federal oversight and supreme control if the new federal laws were similar to those which are in force within her borders. What Pennsylvania fears is not the national government, but weak laws and inefficient administration if all the state laws were subordinated to the national authority. She has a splendid collection of laws regulating the manufacture and sale of food products and soft drinks. In this commonwealth there is comparatively little misbranded or adulterated food on sale. The laws were framed by experts who were sincerely interested in securing for the people of the state pure and honest food. Our people are opposed to any new departure that would weaken or supersede our laws by less effective legislation. We shall make no comparisons between the effectiveness of the nation and the state; comparisons are often odious.

Whenever the nation wishes to assume supreme control, subordinating the various state regulations to federal statutes, let congress take the laws of Pennsylvania as their model. If it does it will enact a measure that will protect the consuming public and do honest manufacturers, wholesales and retailers no manner of harm. But if federal control is to cater to "business interests," that is to say to the selfishness of those who wish to enhance their gains at the expense of the human frame, we shall continue steadfastly to oppose uniformity. Such uniformity would cost entirely too much in health, perhaps in life.

THE NON-ALCOHOLIC DRINK SITUATION.

Since the beginning of the year 1920 samples of non-alcoholic drinks to the number of 1,400 have been purchased in various cities, towns and villages in all sections of the commonwealth by the special agents of the Food Bureau, Department of Agriculture. These samples were analyzed by the official chemists of the bureau and as a result of their findings saccharin was found to have been used in 325 of them as a substitute for sugar. In each of these cases prosecutions have been instituted and terminated, because the use of saccharin is the violation of the non-alcoholic drink act of March 11, 1909. The work of the official chemists revealed a worse condition in connection with such drinks than has existed any summer since the Food Bureau was created. It was undoubtedly the result of the high price of sugar as well as its scarcity.

Many of the bottlers got into trouble by buying for flavoring purposes a syrup that was advertised to dispense with the necessity of using sugar for sweetening purposes in the finished product. The syrups were found to contain saccharin as a sweetening agent and were shipped by manufacturers in Rochester, N. Y., and Chicago, Ill. Upon discovering the presence of such sweetening agents in the state Director Foust immediately got in communication with Dr. Carl Alsberg, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, federal Department of Agriculture, at Washington. Immediate action was taken. The Bureau of Chemistry sent agents out to seize the syrups and had them recalled from Pennsylvania, as all such products violated the national food and drugs act also.

Many of the bottlers arrested in Pennsylvania had no knowledge that their finished product contain saccharin; nevertheless, they were guilty under the law of Pennsylvania and were obliged to pay fines and costs. The most deplorable condition existed in Philadelphia, Lackawanna and Luzerne counties but the strong arm of the Pennsylvania act, reinforced by federal courts was put to work and the situation has been greatly improved while violations of law have practically ceased.

Bottlers who are asked to buy syrups or raw material which are represented to supply a sweetening agent while not requiring sugar in the manufacture of soft drinks should have their suspicions aroused. Ordinary common sense should teach them that there must be something in the syrup that takes the place of sugar and that that something is almost certainly saccharin. Manufacturers of non-alcoholic drinks are bound to know that the raw material used by them is free from prohibited chemicals, as required by the Pennsylvania law. Those who use raw materials concerning which they know nothing use them at their peril and run the risk of coming in contact with the laws of the commonwealth.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING JULY, 1920.

During the month of July 129 prosecutions were ordered in various parts of the state for violations of the food act, as follows:

There were six prosecutions ordered for violation of the milk and cream act. For selling milk low in fats and solids, 1; for selling watered milk, 5. These offenses were committed in Allegheny, Beaver, Lawrence and Schuylkill counties.

Three prosecutions were ordered for violation of the cream act, one each in the counties of Blair, Philadelphia and Schuylkill. The offenses included the sale of chocolate ice cream low in fat, 1; selling vanilla ice cream low in fat, 2.

There were sixteen prosecutions for violation of the vinegar act. The offenses were committed in Allegheny, Indiana, Jefferson and Washington counties as follows: Adulterated cider vinegar, 1; distilled cider vinegar, 13; distilled cider vinegar, colored with caramel, low in acetic acid, 2.

There was a single offense against the oleomargarine act, for selling "butter," which proved to be oleomargarine. It was done in Lawrence county.

For violations of the food act 35 prosecutions were ordered, offenses having occurred in the following counties: Allegheny, Blair, Clinton, Clarion, Clearfield, Crawford, Elk, Erie, Jefferson, Lackawanna, Luzerne, Lycoming, Northumberland and Philadelphia. The offenses were: Selling cakes colored with coal tar dye, 1; candy grab bags, wormy and decomposed, 1; candied cherries containing sulphur dioxide, 1; chocolate coated cherries containing sulphur dioxide, 16; chocolate coated cherries containing sulphur dioxide and colored with coal tar dye, 6; chocolate cherries adulterated and misbranded, 1; liquid cordial cherries, chocolate coated and containing sulphur dioxide, 1; calarab figbuds containing sulphur dioxide, not stated on package, 1; calapricots containing sulphur dioxide, not stated on the package, 1; dried codfish unfit for food, 1; currant biscuits containing coal tar dye, 1; fancy figs containing undeclared sulphur dioxide, 1; bulk figs containing undeclared sulphur dioxide, 1; olive oil consisting of cotton seed oil, 1; syrup containing saccharin, 1.

Violations of the non-alcoholic drinks act occurred in the counties of Allegheny, Armstrong, Chester, Clinton, Columbia, Erie, Mercer, Northumberland, Philadelphia and Schuylkill. The unlawful sales were: Cherry pop containing saccharin, 2; cherry blossom pop containing saccharin, 1; cream soda pop containing saccharin, 4; Cresta Cola pop containing saccharin, 2; lemon pop containing saccharin, 3; pine apple pop containing saccharin, 1; pop containing saccharin, 1; raspberry pop containing saccharin, 1; red pop containing saccharin, 1; strawberry pop containing saccharin, 9; strawberry pop containing saccharin colored with coal tar dye and artificially flavored, 1; vanilla pop containing saccharin, 1; cherry soda containing saccharin, 4; grape soda containing saccharin, 3; lemon soda containing saccharin, 7; orange soda containing saccharin, 7; ginger ale containing saccharin, 1; fruit ola containing saccharin, 2; orangeade containing little or no orange juice, 1; orangeade misbranded, artificially colored with coal tar dye and containing no orange juice, 4; orangeade containing no orange juice and artificially colored, 2; orange squeeze misbranded, artificially colored with coal tar dye and containing no orange juice, 1; birch beer containing saccharin, 3; root beer containing saccharin, 5; red cider, misbranded, artificially colored with coal tar dye and preserved with sodium benzoate, 1.

Elsewhere something is said about the widespread use of saccharin as a substitute for sugar, which was both scarce and dear during the spring and summer and of the steps that were taken to put an end to a practice that is contrary to the laws of the commonwealth. It will be made clear to offenders, we imagine, that it does not pay to disregard the law and we indulge the hope that this trouble is now at an end. It will be perceived that some of the products put on the market were far from being what they claimed to be and since their manufacture and sale were in flat violation of law and likewise dangerous to the health of consumers, those who were arrested and fined received no more than justice.

FARMERS REQUIRE NO PERMIT.

Farmers in Pennsylvania who grow their own apples, may make their apples into cider and hold this cider until it has fermented into cider vinegar without securing any kind of a license or permit from the Federal prohibition or internal revenue authorities.

This information is contained in a letter to Director James Foust of the Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, from John F. Kramer, of Washington, D. C., Prohibition Commissioner for the United States.

Recently a number of technical and confusing rulings on the cider situation were issued from the prohibition enforcement offices at Washington. These rulings were confusing to the farmers and in many sections of Pennsylvania farmers were permitting their apples to rot on the ground, rather than take chances of running afoul of the prohibition laws by making cider for vinegar purposes, being under the impression that it was necessary to secure a license or permit.

Director Foust in calling on the farmers of the State to make their surplus apples into cider vinegar, points out that by making the apples into cider and storing this cider away on their own premises until it becomes vinegar they may realize a good profit and run no risk whatever of violating the prohibition laws. The farmer may do this without securing a permit of any kind.

In selling sweet cider, the farmer runs a chance of selling a beverage containing more than one-half of one per cent. of alcohol, in which case, he is liable to fine and imprisonment. By holding his cider until it is vinegar, according to Director Foust, he runs absolutely no risk and secures an excellent return for his fruit and his labors.

Farmers desiring still further information on the cider situation should write to John F. Kramer, Prohibition Commissioner, Washington, D. C.

CONCERNING OLIVES AND BEANS.

The following notes explain themselves:

March 19, 1920.

Prof. Charles H. LaWall,
39 South Tenth St.,
Philadelphia, Pa.

My dear Sir:—

March 15, 1920, a can of Falcon brand ripe olives numbered 4055 was received and examined.

The can was opened under sterile conditions and the fruit gave off the peculiar agreeable odor of ripe olives and were of good taste. Some were firm others soft in consistency.

Two guinea pigs were inoculated, one with 0.5 c. c. of the liquor and the other with 0.5 c. c. of a salt suspension of the fruit. Both animals are alive and well seventy-two hours after inoculation.

Very few bacteria were observed in spreads made from the salt suspension and anaerobic inoculations remained sterile.

SUMMARY:

This can of olives was in good condition; fruit was of agreeable taste, and the liquor and fruit were without poisonous effect on the guinea pigs; therefore, perfectly wholesome.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) DR. RANDLE C. ROSENBERGER,
Professor of Hygiene and Bacteriology.

March 4, 1920.

Prof. Charles H. LaWall,
39 South Tenth St.,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir:—

On March 2nd I received four cans of Bee brand of string beans, numbered 13613.

These cans were opened under sterile precautions and inoculation of the liquor and a salt suspension of the beans made into alkaline gelatin.

There was no unpleasant odor noticed when the cans were opened and no bulging was noticeable in any of the four cans.

Two guinea pigs were inoculated; one with 0.5 c. c. of the liquor and the other with 0.5 c. c. of the salt suspension of the crushed beans. Inoculations into gelatin remained sterile.

As there was no disagreeable odor of the beans and no symptoms (or death) took place in the animals, I would say that the specimens were clean and wholesome.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) DR. RANDLE C. ROSENBERGER,
Professor of Hygiene and Bacteriology.

DYED WATER SOLD AS ORANGE JUICE.

FOOD OFFICIALS CAUTION PUBLIC NOT TO BE DECEIVED BY PICTURES OF THE FRUIT ON THE LABEL—SHOULD READ LABELS CAREFULLY.

All is not orange juice that is orange colored these days. Nor is it orange juice because it comes in a bottle with an attractive picture of that fruit on the label, explain officials of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture. The wise in this era of soft drinks read the label critically before they buy or drink the contents of a bottle, the advice of the Federal food officials goes on.

The juice of the orange is one of the most healthful of beverages, they say. It contains organic acids of medicinal value and substances known as vitamins which are essential to health. But the trouble is that many of the so-called orange drinks which are on the market contain none of the real orange juice. These imitations are usually concocted of sweetened, artificially carbonated water, colored with a dye to imitate orange juice, and flavored with a little oil from the peel of the orange. While they may not contain ingredients injurious to the health of adults, they are imitations which lack the medicinal qualities characteristic of fruit juices. They should not be used in place of genuine orange juice, the officials say, especially as a food for babies and young children. A few of the bottled orange drinks do contain some of the genuine fruit but when orange juice is needed in the diet of children the best way to obtain it is to buy the fruit and press out the juice.

The information as to what a bottle of soft drink contains ordinarily can be found on the label, but sometimes a magnifying glass may be required if the thirsty one does not have strong eyes. The manufacturer is usually very modest in displaying this information, but to conform with the Federal Food and Drugs Act he must place it on the label. The terms "ade," "squash" "punch," "crush," and "smash" can only be applied correctly to beverages which contain the edible portion of the fruit or juice of the fruit named on the label, Bureau of Chemistry officials say, but this year many beverages with fanciful names, beverages which are imitations of fruit juices and which have only the odor or flavor of the fruit of which they purport to be the juice, are being placed on the market.

The officials in charge of the enforcement of the Federal Food and Drugs Act have instituted proceedings to require correct labeling of the products coming within the jurisdiction of that law. In the meantime, pending judicial determination as to what is correct labeling of these products under the law, some manufacturers are continuing to put their deceptively labeled drinks on the market. Attention is called to the fact that the soft-drink industry is largely a local industry. Many of the bottled soft drinks are sold and consumed within the State where they are made. Such drinks are not subject to the Federal Food and Drugs Act, which applies only to foods and drugs that enter interstate or foreign commerce or that are made or sold within the District of Columbia or a territory.

CHOCOLATE COATED CHERRIES AND GLACE FRUITS.

Beginning about the first of December of last year and continuing on down to the present time, the Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, has been conducting a diligent and rather fruitful investigation in connection with the sale of chocolate coated cherries, glace pineapple and other glace fruits offered for sale in the various parts of the State. The result thus far has been the bringing and the termination of over 100 prosecutions. The sale of unlawfully prepared chocolate coated cherries alone compelled no less than 80 prosecutions, all of which resulted in the conviction of the dealer. In these instances the official chemists who analyzed this product found sulphur dioxide present in quantities varying from 50 parts to the million to 300 parts. In the chocolate coated cherries the sulphur dioxide was found in the cherries. This was also true of the glace fruits. Not all glace fruits contain sulphur dioxide, but of those examined, about four out of five did.

Chocolate coated cherries and glace fruits cannot be sold in Pennsylvania when containing sulphur dioxide, no matter how minute the quantity, without plunging the seller in a sea of trouble. The question of quantity was thoroughly considered by the Common Pleas, the Superior and the Supreme Courts of this State in the case of the Commonwealth versus Pflaum. In this case it was contended by the defense that the confectionery in question contained only a trace of sulphur dioxide; less than 50 parts to the million. The lower Courts held that if it contained any sulphur dioxide the defendant was guilty. This view was sustained by the Supreme Court. Such is the law and the interpretation thereof by our highest legal tribunal.

James Foust, Director of the Bureau of Foods, desires to serve fair warning upon all manufacturers and dealers that the only safe course to pursue in Pennsylvania is to refrain from the manufacture and sale of chocolate coated cherries and glace fruits. By so doing they will save both themselves and the Bureau of Foods a great deal of annoyance and unnecessary trouble. This statement is issued now, so that ample time may be given manufacturers to conform with the law. Should it be necessary to bring a lot of prosecutions at the moment the Christmas candy trade is at its height, and should it be found that much of this candy has been adulterated by the use of sulphur dioxide, criticism of the Bureau of Foods would be unjust. Prosecutions injure the candy industry, entail heavy expense and trouble on vendors and create unpleasant feelings generally.

Outside of the products referred to, the candy situation is in splendid shape, and this one line of products should not be allowed to discredit the whole industry.

POSSIBILITIES OF THE TIN CAN.

The Michigan Food and Drug Monthly contains a very sensible and practical article under the above heading about one of the possible nuisances of domestic life. It says: Every one knows how they accumulate—these old tin cans, that will not burn nor rot—until the stone fence around the back yard is lined with them, and other waste places slowly reveal the rusty brown of their rusty sides. But every one does not know that they may be made useful in many ways.

First of all comes their possible use in the garden. Many plants thrive on deep watering. For this set a can in the earth, letting the top come about an inch above the ground. Before placing the can make a network of holes in the bottom. It takes but little time to follow the rows and fill the cans, and the added growth of your plants will amply repay the trouble. Nearly all plants can be safely reset if the roots are not disturbed. Place tin cans in a hot oven until the solder runs from them, tie a string around to hold them in place, filled with earth, set on a board, then plant your early seeds, and when you wish to set the plants out of doors simply cut the strings, carefully placing the mass of earth in the prepared holes, and the plant will hardly know that it has been disturbed. Place shallow tins in shady spots, keep them filled with clean water, and gratefully accept the thanks of the birds which will appreciate your thoughtfulness. If, in addition to this, you place other cans among the branches of surrounding trees and fill them with grains, you may accept the daily songs of thanks with smiling pleasure.

a beans,
en peas, wax

Very acceptable footstools may be made of tin cans covered with any material you choose. Five large cans with a small one in the centre is a very good size. Fill the cans with sand, cover with stout cotton cloth and sew together before putting on the outside covering.

A single can, covered with carpeting like that on the floor of a room, is a neat prop to keep a door open.

Discarded cans are of great value in a poultry house. To make a water dish, take a large tin can and a shallow basin which just fits over the top. Make three or four nail holes in the can slightly below the level of the top of the basin, fill the can with water and invert in the basin. Tack cans along the sides of the pen to hold oyster shells, grit, charcoal, etc.

Many other ways of utilizing these much despised cans will be found when once the train of thought is taken up. Then, too, the pleasure of "making something out of nothing" will be yours in each successful effort.

BANNING IMPORTED BUTTER.

According to the Milk Reporter, several shipments of butter offered for entry into the United States from foreign countries have been denied entry because the butter failed to come up to the requirements of the federal food and drugs act. So say officials of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture. The imported butter has to meet the same standards and tests as the domestic products. The majority of the shipments which were refused entry contained too little butter-fat and too much salt and water, but a few contained boric acid, a harmful preservative.

The greater part of butter imported into the United States now comes from Canada, but shipments come also from Denmark, Australia, Argentina and New Zealand. Of 300 shipments of butter from Canada examined, thirty-three, or a little more than 10 per cent. of those examined, were denied entry into the United States. A few shipments from other countries also were not admitted because they were adulterated under the food and drugs act.

Shipments of imported butter are carefully inspected at the ports of entry, and only such butter is admitted, say the officials in charge of the enforcement of the food and drugs act, as meet the standard which the domestic product is required to meet.

FILL THE CAN FULL.

FOOD OFFICIALS EXPLAIN HOW DRAINED WEIGHT SPECIFICATIONS
HELP CANNER STANDARDIZE QUANTITY IN CAN.

"Fill the can as full of solid food as is practicable by the best commercial methods without impairment of the quality or appearance of the product," is the advice Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, gives to inquiring canners who state that they can not in some instances reach the drained weights published by the bureau. "The can that is as full of solid food as is practicable and correctly labeled will meet the requirements of the pure food law with reference to fill, will promote fair trading among canners, and will win the confidence of the trade and the consuming public."

Furthermore, according to Dr. Alsberg, by following such practice the canner will find in nearly every instance that his cans average in quantity very close to the drained weights specified by the bureau. In the relatively few instances where there is material variation, it will be found that either there is some variation from the normal in the density of the product or of some other factor affecting the drained weight, or too little solid food has been put in the can. The canner knows whether or not he is filling his cans as full of solid food as is practicable, and the bureau specialists by an examination of the contents of the can, supplemented by inspection reports on the cannery and comparison with data regarding variations which have been collected by an extensive investigation in all parts of the country, can determine whether the shortage is due to variations from the normal in the character of the materials or to slack-filling.

VARIATIONS FROM SPECIFIED WEIGHTS.

The food official does not use, and the canner need not use the drained weights specified as an iron-clad rule from which there can not be the slightest variation. The specifications need not be treated with the exactness with which the carpenter uses his measure in determining the width of a doorway, but may be used rather as the locomotive engineer uses the minimum mark on his steam gauge to warn him that when the steam pressure falls to a certain point he should give attention to his power in order to prevent his train from falling behind its schedule. It may be that the conditions of grade and load are such that no more steam is necessary, but when the indicator points to the minimum mark set for the engineer's guidance it is time to assure himself on this point or call for more steam. So when the canner finds his drained weights falling below the figures set, he should assure himself that it is not because of slack-fill. If it is due to natural variations which he can not control, no further attention need be given the matter, but if it is due to slack-fill, as in most instances it will be, the canner is in a position to correct his practice before he collides with the food official.

SPECIFIED DRAINED WEIGHTS FOR GUIDANCE OF INSPECTORS.

It became necessary for the Bureau of Chemistry to determine for the guidance of its inspectors and analysts what the drained weight should be for various fruits and vegetables when put up in accordance with the best commercial practice in order to enforce Food Inspection Decision 144, which among other things provides that the can should be as full of food as is practicable without injuring the quality or appearance of the contents. When is the can as full as practicable? How will the inspector in Maryland and the inspector in Indiana act uniformly in this matter? To answer these and other pertinent questions, the Bureau of Chemistry made an extensive investigation in which it examined thousands of cans of fruits and vegetables put up in different factories under a great variety of conditions. The data obtained were compiled and studied and figures obtained which represent what is a fair indication of the drained weight in the properly filled can under average conditions in the country as a whole. When it is found that a pack varies materially from these figures, it is an indication to the inspector that an investigation should be made to determine whether the variation was due to natural causes or to slack-fill. A variation below the amount specified always indicates that there may be slack-filling, but that fact alone does not establish slack-filling.

The figures on drained weight were published as they were completed for the information of the canning trade. If a canner finds that the drained weights of his products are running lower than the weights specified by the bureau, it is an indication to him that either he is slack-filling or that there is something abnormal in his product or the conditions under which he puts it up. He generally knows or can easily determine whether he is slack-filling or not.

STANDARDIZED WEIGHTS AID INDUSTRY.

It is essential that the quantity of solid food in the can be standardized in order to promote fair trading. Recently the food inspectors found a pack of peas that were slack-filled approximately eight per cent. which on the quantity of that pack represented a difference of several thousand dollars in the cost of the peas to the consumer. It is apparent that the canner who fills his can as full of solid food as practicable will have difficulty in competing with the canner who slack-fills. While the food official is primarily interested in the full can for the protection of the consumer, he is also interested in promoting fair trading among the canners. Slack-filling is demoralizing to the trade and inevitably reacts unfavorably upon the industry which tolerates it.

The Bureau of Chemistry recognizes that there are natural variations in conditions which will cause variations in the amount of solid food that can be put in the can. Announcements to the trade giving specifications for the drained weight of different products have in most cases contained a statement to the effect that some variations are to be expected. Much attention has been given, and is now being given, to a study of the factors which cause variations and the relative effect of each. The specialists can now determine in practically every instance whether a variation from the drained weight specified by the bureau is due to unavoidable conditions or to slack-fill.

VARIATIONS INDICATE SLACK-FILLING.

The variations in the quantity of solid food that occur in the same kind of product put up by different canners is not in most instances due to varying conditions beyond the control of the canner, but is generally due to the fact that some canners habitually fill the can as full as practicable, while other canners either intentionally, or by the practice of improper methods of filling or factory procedure which can be corrected, continuously slack-fill. Each canner who finds his drained weight running lower than that of good commercial practice, as represented by the bureau specifications, should find the cause as a matter of self-protection and of fair trading, if he does not already know it, to assure himself that the variation is not due to some fault of his methods which he may have overlooked. The assumption of some canners that a drop in the drained weight below the bureau specification is always due to varying conditions beyond the control of the canner is untenable in the light of the fact that other canners in the same territory, with similar conditions of raw materials and finished product, with no variation of density in the food or the liquid or other essential factor, are meeting the specified weights.

Inspectors of the Bureau of Chemistry have been instructed to give special attention to this matter in making inspection of canneries during the current season, and to render all possible assistance to canners in locating the cause of variations from the specified drained weights.

Specifications for drained weights for the following products have been published: Pitted and unpitted cherries, peaches, lima beans, pears, spinach, Swiss chard, beet tops, sauerkraut, green peas, wax and refugee beans. Specifications for the drained weights of other products will, when deemed advisable, be published as the work on such products is completed. Copies of the specifications issued to date will be furnished upon application to the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

STOP THE SALE OF SACCHARIN.

Through the co-operation of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Foods, and the Federal authorities in Washington, the saccharin menace in Pennsylvania has been practically eliminated. Agents of the State Bureau of Foods have located the sources of practically all of the doped syrups containing saccharin and not only has the sale of these products been stopped in Pennsylvania, but the Federal authorities have taken steps to prevent the shipment of the banned products into the State.

Director James Foust, following a conference with Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, at Washington, announced that the situation was better in Pennsylvania than at any time since the soaring price of sugar brought about a use of saccharin by unscrupulous dealers.

DANGER FROM FLIES RECOGNIZED BY COURT.

The Supreme Judicial Court of Maine has decided that a guest who had contracted for two weeks' stay at a hotel was justified in leaving before the expiration of the two weeks when the dining room was infested with flies.

A contract was entered into for a two weeks' stay at a hotel. After three or four days the guests left, paying the regular transient rate for the time they had been at the hotel. The reason assigned for leaving was that the flies in the dining room constituted a nuisance and were dangerous to health. No complaint was made regarding other conditions at the hotel.

The proprietor sought to recover for the full two weeks' stay contracted for, and he succeeded in the lower court. But the Supreme Court granted the motion of the defendant for a new trial, holding that the guests were justified in leaving the hotel for the reason that they did. The opinion treats at great length of the danger of the fly and quotes from public health literature on the subject.

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA
DEPARTMENT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Harrisburg, September 25, 1920.

HONORABLE JAMES FOUST,

Director, Bureau of Foods,
Department of Agriculture, Harrisburg, Pa.,

Dear Sir:—

I have your letter of recent date, inquiring whether Corkran Hill and Company can take out a license to sell oleomargarine at wholesale through a resident of Pennsylvania, and by the resident of Pennsylvania transmit the orders to Corkran Hill and Company's place of business at Baltimore, Maryland, to be shipped by Corkran Hill and Company through their place of business at Baltimore, Maryland, to retail dealers doing a retail business under a license in the State of Pennsylvania.

I have also a letter written by hand by J. Denny Armstrong, Assistant Treasurer of Corkran Hill and Company, which was written by him in your office when he was unable to see you personally. This letter asks five specific questions which I will repeat in this letter and reply to specifically.

The original Oleomargarine Law of Pennsylvania, approved May 21, 1885, forbade the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine within the State of Pennsylvania. This Act was a police regulation of the State of Pennsylvania for the purpose of protecting the public health and preventing fraud.

In the case of Powell vs. Pennsylvania, a man was charged with having sold oleomargarine in violation of this Act. He contended that the Act was an unreasonable exercise of the police power, and the case went to the Supreme Court of the United States upon that proposition. The Supreme Court of the United States held in 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. Ed. 253, that the Act was a legitimate exercise of the police power of the State for the protection of the health of the people, and for the prevention of fraud, and was not inconsistent with the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. That decision was rendered April 9, 1888.

Some years later a prosecution was brought against George Schollenberger, charging a violation of the same Act. It appeared in this case that the oleomargarine sold had been consigned to Schollenberger by a foreign corporation, of which he was the duly appointed agent, and that the oleomargarine had been sold in the original package. That case went to the Supreme Court of the United States also, upon the question as to whether the police power of Pennsylvania could prevent the sale of oleomargarine in original packages shipped from another State. That case is reported in 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. Ed. 49. It was there held that oleomargarine is a legitimate article of commerce, and that a State can not, in the absence of congressional legislation, prevent the importation of a lawful article of commerce from one State to another in the original package in which the article was introduced into the State. The ground of this decision was that the enforcement of the Act of 1885 against interstate commerce was invalid in view of the right of Congress to control interstate commerce.

On May 9, 1902, the Congress of the United States enacted the following statute:—

"All articles known as oleomargarine, butterine, imitation, process, renovated, or adulterated butter, or imitation cheese, or any substance in the semblance of butter, or cheese not the usual product of the dairy and not made exclusively of pure and unadulterated milk or cream, transported into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall, upon the arrival within the limits of such State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory or the District of Columbia, enacted in the exercise of its police powers to the same extent and in the same manner as though such articles or substances had been produced in such State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise." (United States Compiled Statutes 1916, Section 8740; 32 Stat. 193.)

The effect of this Act of Congress was to surrender to the States control over this particular article of interstate commerce. A similar Act of Congress was examined by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Wilkerson vs. Rohrer, 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. Ed. 572. The effect of this Act of Congress is to submit this particular article of interstate commerce to every reasonable police regulation which a State may make to control or regulate its own commerce.

In view of these decisions and of the statute quoted, it would seem that the State of Pennsylvania now has the power to impose any regulations which it may see fit or even to prohibit the traffic in oleomargarine.

The Act of 1885, however, did not remain the law of this State. A new Act was passed May 29, 1901, which was amended June 5, 1913. These Acts, which now constitute the Statute Law on the subject, are not designed to prohibit the sale of oleomargarine, but to regulate it in such a manner as to protect the health of the people and to prevent deception and fraud. Provisions for licensing wholesale and retail dealers and for inspection are made. It will be noted from a reading of Section 2 of the Act that an application for a license—

"shall contain an accurate description of the place where the proposed business is intended to be carried on,"

and further that—

"such license shall not authorize the manufacture or sale, exposing for sale, or having in possession with intent to sell, oleomargarine, butterine, or any similar substance, at any other place than that designated in the application and license."

It was said by Deputy Attorney General William M. Hargest in his opinion of February 3, 1916,—

"Under the provisions of this law it is clear that both the person and the place are licensed. It is also clear that oleomargarine could not be sold by an unauthorized person at an authorized place or by an authorized person at an unauthorized place."

The proper regulation of the traffic and inspection of the merchandise seems to require that a foreign dealer or manufacturer should secure a license in Pennsylvania to do business at a designated place within the State, and that all goods sold under that license should be sent to that place and sold and distributed from there. To permit a different practice would decrease the efficiency of the regulation and inspection. I, therefore, advise you that the practice suggested by Corkran Hill and Company ought not to be permitted.

I shall now reply specifically to the questions put by Mr. Armstrong.

"1. Is the requirement of your State regarding the maintaining an office in Pennsylvania for the purpose of regulating intra-state commerce, or inter-state commerce?"

Answer. The purpose of the Pennsylvania statute is not to, regulate commerce at all, but to protect the health of the people and to prevent fraud.

"2. Do you realize that, if compelled to distribute goods from a central office in Pennsylvania, the product would not reach the dealer as quickly and, therefore, in poorer condition, than if shipped to him direct from Baltimore?"

Answer. This may be true, but this result must be weighed against the result that would follow from the practice suggested, to wit, that the efficiency of the regulation and inspection of wholesale traffic in this product would be destroyed.

"3. Do you admit that a corporation in Maryland has the right under decision of the Federal Courts to ship goods into other States and that the right to ship carries with it the right to sell in Pennsylvania and other States?"

Answer. The Oleomargarine Law of Pennsylvania is a police regulation, and under the decisions referred to and the Act of Congress of 1902, which I have quoted, all sales of oleomargarine within the State are subject to the police power of the State.

"4. Would not the citizens of Pennsylvania be benefited by being able to procure, through their own dealers, eliminating the "middleman," a food product which in every respect, is just as pure and wholesome as the high priced product for which it is to be substituted?"

Answer. Every statute providing for inspection and regulation of an article of commerce increases the ultimate cost to the consumer. The consumer must necessarily pay this cost to insure the best product. It is, of course, desirable to eliminate the middleman, if necessary, but, on the other hand, if it be necessary to have a middleman in order to secure efficient inspection and regulation of the product then the consumer must pay the middleman's profit.

"5. Is not the Pennsylvania law relating to oleomargarine primarily for the purpose of raising revenue, and, if so, would not the payment of your State license fee satisfy your office and fully comply with the laws of your State, admitting that an article of interstate commerce may be sold in Pennsylvania under the rulings of the Federal courts?"

Answer. The Oleomargarine Law of Pennsylvania is not a revenue measure but is a police regulation. This has been frequently recognized by both the United States and the State Courts.

We are not willing to admit that under the rulings of the Federal Courts oleomargarine may be sold in Pennsylvania in any other manner than as prescribed by the statutes of Pennsylvania passed in the lawful exercise of its police power.

I trust that I have covered all phases of the inquiry.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) GEO. ROSS HULL,
Deputy Attorney General.

THE FOOD BUREAU DURING THE YEAR 1920.

The year of 1920, just closing, has been one of the most interesting and fruitful in a certain sense in the entire history of the Bureau of Foods. This was largely due to the readjustments brought about by the close of the World War. Among other things the country was obliged to contend with was a wholly unexpected shortage in the sugar supply. The fact that the demand was far in excess of the supply naturally led to a sharp advance in the price. Even then manufacturers to whom sugar was almost a vital necessity were not always able to obtain enough to satisfy the demands of their business. Owing to the high price and the scanty supply a considerable number of persons interested in the bottling industry resorted to the use of saccharin as a substitute for sugar. This, of course, constituted a violation of the law of Pennsylvania.

It was likewise discovered that the candy industry, embarrassed by the scarcity of sugar and not desiring to close down had started to put on the market chocolate or candied cherries which were found to be adulterated. The agents in various parts of the state were directed to purchase samples of these products. Several hundred were bought. As a result from fifty to one hundred prosecutions were necessarily brought in the effort to make an end of the illegal sale of this commodity. The candied fruit in many instances contained sulphur dioxide. It is against the law of this commonwealth to sell candy containing sulphur dioxide. This is true without reference to quantity. Not even a mere trace is allowed.

The Bureau also conducted several investigations in connection with the milk and cream sold for consumption in this state. Between 4,000 and 5,000 samples were collected by the agents of the Bureau and analyzed by the official chemists. The result was that it became necessary to institute a large number of prosecutions. It was found that where milk and cream were low in butter-fat water had usually been added.

During the months of October and November a state-wide investigation was made of the flour shipped into the state. This came chiefly from the Middle West. In many of these samples the chemists found nitrous acid, a result of the bleaching process. It is against the law of Pennsylvania to sell bleached flour within her borders, so that it became necessary to order a comparatively large number of prosecutions. It may be added that several hundred miscellaneous samples were analyzed and as a result some prosecutions were ordered. It is a principle of law that ignorance of the requirements of any act will excuse nobody. For that and other reasons every manufacturer or dealer should familiarize himself with the provisions of all the laws of this commonwealth which relate to the manufacture or sale of food products.

As a part of its work—much pleasanter than prosecutions—the Bureau of Foods issued 6,300 oleomargarine licenses, seventy cold storage licenses, twenty-nine egg-opening licenses. These three industries are under the direct supervision of the Bureau of Foods, and their operations have been carefully examined as well as guarded by the agents of the Bureau. It is believed that substantial progress has been made during the year.

BUREAU OF FOODS DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The Bureau of Foods, created as the sixth bureau of the Department of Agriculture under the Act of May 8, 1919, is charged with essentially the same duties that under the preceding organization of the Department pertained to the office of the Dairy and Food Commissioner, together with such additional duties as were created by certain laws enacted during the legislative session of 1919. These duties as a whole may be briefly described as consisting of the enforcement of all laws of this State relating to the manufacture, sale, transportation and storage of foods and non-alcoholic drinks for man. In other words, it is the agency created to prevent the adulteration and misbranding of foods and to secure, as far as the laws may give power to the end, the sanitary production, manufacture, storage and handling of human foods.

The Bureau was established for the important purpose of protecting the health of the people of the Commonwealth by controlling the purity and standards of their food supplies.

The protection of the food supply of eight million people, who must eat to live, is essential and requires constant supervision. Every law enacted for this purpose is for the immediate good of every citizen.

Has supervision over the sanitary condition of cold storage plants, as well as the wholesomeness of products offered for storage. Pennsylvania cold storage industry approximates an investment of $75,000,000.

Supervises the places licensed for the sale of oleomargarine in order to prevent fraud and deception in the sale of the product.

Issues sixty-one hundred oleomargarine licenses annually together with eighty licenses to operate cold storage warehouses, and twenty-five licenses to conduct egg opening establishments.

FOOD PRODUCTS IN COLD STORAGE WAREHOUSES.

There are seventy licensed cold storage warehouses in Pennsylvania. These are subject to inspection at various intervals by the agents of the Bureau of Foods. This inspection is constantly and carefully maintained. The several cold storage warehouses are likewise required to make accurate reports of the quantities of total food products in storage at the end of each quarter. It must be understood that the Cold Storage Act does not apply to cold stored fruits or vegetables, syrups, sugars and other products not of animal origin for which cold storage is customarily employed as a measure of preservation. We propose in this article to compare the cold stored products in these warehouse during the quarter ending September, 1920, with the same period in the previous year.

EGGS IN SHELL.

The seventy cold storage warehouses in this commonwealth contained on September 30, 1919, 15,536,287 eggs in shell. On the 30th of September, 1920, they contained 12,115,608, a decrease of 3,420,579. That means almost half an egg for each inhabitant of Pennsylvania, young and old.

BUTTER.

In the matter of butter deposited in cold storage warehouses in the state, 1920 shows a perceptible increase over 1919. September 30, 1919, the butter in cold storage aggregated 7,390,839 pounds, whilst on the corresponding date in 1920 the figures show 9,233,607 pounds stored, a gain of 1,842,768 pounds.

MUTTON.

The 187,685 pounds of mutton stored in September 30, 1919, suddenly swelled to 1,342,791 pounds on that date a year later. This gain of 1,155,685 pounds is ascribed to the immense increase in the shipments of South American mutton to the United States during recent months. Mutton is a wholesome and relishable food product.

BEEF.

Speaking roundly, the difference between the aggregate of beef in the seventy-five cold storage warehouses on September 30, 1919, and on the same date in 1920, was comparatively trifling, the figures for the former year showing 1,788,670 pounds and for the latter, 1,976,288 pounds, a gain of 187,618 pounds.

POULTRY.

On September 30, 1919, the figures show that 1,750,921 pounds of poultry were in cold storage, whilst for the corresponding date of 1920 there was a decrease of 443,483 pounds, the number of pounds in cold storage being 1,307,438 pounds.

VEAL.

The cold storage warehouses of the commonwealth contained 57,609 less pounds of veal on September 30, 1920 than on the 30th of September, 1919, the figures being 290,581 pounds and 232,972, respectively.

PORK.

There was an ample supply of pork in the cold storage warehouses on the 30th of September, 1920, a decided increase, as compared with the previous year. On the last day of September, 1919, they contained 1,422,733 pounds; on the 30th of September, 1920, this had grown to 4,801,691 pounds, an increase of 3,378,958 pounds.

FISH.

There was an increase of 2,004,111 pounds of fish in the cold storage warehouses on the last day of the third quarter of 1920, as compared with the same date last year. September 30, 1919, the warehouses held 2,203,309 pounds, whilst on September 30, 1920, the number of pounds was 4,207,309.

PHILADELPHIA COLD STORAGE.

Of the aggregate of the cold storage products list in the foregoing statistics, Philadelphia county cold storage warehouses contained the following on September 30, 1920: Eggs, 6,162,660 dozen; Butter, 5,041,395 pounds; Fish, 1,226,825 pounds; Mutton, 976,445 pounds; Beef, 1,448,937 pounds; Poultry, 1,003,243 pounds; Veal, 200,220 pounds; Pork, 1,754,950 pounds.

UNIFORMITY, YES, BUT THE RIGHT SORT.

Director James Foust, of the Bureau of Foods recently received a letter from the editor of a leading food publication calling his attention to the Calder bill, intended to provide uniformity of food laws from the standpoint of a certain class of manufacturers and dealers, to which he made a reply that may prove interesting to the friends of effective food legislation. The letter of Director Foust follows:

"I have your favor of the 5th with reference to President Frary's suggestion at the recent convention of the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials at St. Louis favoring uniformity in food laws, regarding which permit me to say that I am in favor of uniformity, but uniformity is out of the question until the National Food and Drugs Act is amended and made effective. The place to commence uniformity is in Washington, by changing the National Food and Drug Acts of June 30, 1906, so that it will prevent the sale of adulterated and misbranded foods.

"As to the Calder bill—I read with much interest the proceedings of the hearing before the committee on agriculture and forestry in connection with said bill (S. No. 3011); and as a state food control official, I consider the Calder bill the most dangerous measure dealing with the subject of food ever presented to a legislative body, and I have been connected with food control work for twenty years. It interferes with state rights in protecting the health of the people under the police power vested in the states, and leaves all the states to the mercy of the National Food and Drugs Act, so far as it relates to products shipped in interstate commerce. The National Food and Drugs Act is defective and is as full of holes as a fish net.

"The Calder bill would also render null and void all city ordinances and regulations so far as they relate to products shipped in interstate commerce, as well as all state food laws.

"If a committee of state food control officials were to prepare a bill amending the National Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, making it a real law and making it an offense to manufacture and ship in interstate commerce food products containing any substances deleterious to health, and require labeling that would prevent fraud and deception, you would find the same representatives appearing before the committee opposing the passage of the bill.

"It would be far better to repeal the National Food and Drugs Act than to pass the Calder bill.

"Under the National Food and Drugs Act, bleached flour is shipped in interstate commerce; under the Pennsylvania law, bleached flour cannot be sold as it contains nitrous acid and it injurious to health.

Under the National law, sausage containing vegetable flour and water is shipped in interstate commerce; under the Pennsylvania law, its sale is prohibited. Sixty per cent of sausage meat with five per cent of potato flour added holds, like a sponge, thirty-five per cent of water. What a fraud to be allowed under the guise of a food law!

"Under the national law, so-called egg substitutes or egg savers, usually consisting of corn starch, coal tar dye and a little casein, are shipped in interstate commerce and sold in cartons. Under the Pennsylvania law, their sale is prohibited. There are many other products that I could mention, but these are sufficient to convey my thought—that the states should protect the health of their citizenship.

"I was delighted to read the statement before the Committee of Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, who is a very high class, competent man. He was very guarded in what he said, but he did speak in behalf of over one hundred million people of this country who must eat to live.

"The purpose of food laws is to protect the health of the people, not manufacturers. The legitimate trade, such as the National Canners' Association, the Specialty Manufacturers' Association, and other honest manufacturers, making and selling pure food containing honest labels, are not asking that the Calder bill be enacted into law, and neither is the consuming public.

"Trusting that this statement will serve your purpose, I beg to remain, very truly,

"JAMES FOUST,
"Director."

RULE NO 12, REVISED—FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

Attention of all interested is directed to Rule 12, Flavoring Extracts, as it has been revised:

The names flavoring extract, flavoring, essence and tincture, as applied to articles intended for use in the preparation of foods, shall be used only to designate solutions in ethyl alcohol of proper strength of the sapid and odorous principles derived from an aromatic plant, or parts of the plant, with or without its coloring matter, and shall conform in specific name to the plant used in its preparation. Provided that preparations of the above mentioned flavoring principles in which glycerine or oil is used, instead of ethyl alcohol, as the solvent and which are of the same flavoring strength or concentration as the corresponding alcoholic preparation, may be designated "flavor" or "flavoring" with the addition, as part of the main designation, of the name of the solvent used; and, also, that preparations in which the said flavoring principles are not dissolved, but are held in suspension in an unobjectionable pasty or gummy medium, and are present in the same strength or concentration as in the corresponding alcoholic preparation, may be designated "flavor" or "flavoring" if accompanied, as a part of the main designation, with the name "emulsion" or other name clearly setting forth the distinctive character of the preparation. The names "flavoring extract," "essence" and "tincture" are held not to be applicable to the two classes of preparations mentioned in this proviso.

Flavoring solutions, in the preparation of which flavoring substances not derived from the plant specifically named have been added, shall not be designated as if prepared solely from the aromatic plant named.

An imitation flavoring extract shall not be given a name nor bear upon its label any statement, design or device that shall in any way indicate that it is the flavoring extract which it imitates.

SELLING ADULTERATED CANDY.

OFFICERS OF UNITED STATES ARMY NOT RESPONSIBLE TO PENNSYLVANIA LAWS.

The following opinion by Deputy Attorney General George Ross Hull will be read with interest:

Hon. James Foust, Director, Bureau of Foods, Harrisburg, Pa. Sir:—This Department is in receipt of your communication of October 18th containing a statement of the following facts: Army officers or civilian agents of the War Department of the United States government acting under orders from their Department at Washington, have recently sold a number of tons of chocolate candy bars packed in two pound boxes. The blank forms of bidders' proposals upon which bids for its purchase were made contained in capital letters the following:

"NOTE: THE ABOVE CHOCOLATE CANDY BARS HAVE BEEN CONDEMNED BY SURVEY TO BE UNFIT FOR HUMAN CONSUMPTION."

Unscrupulous persons who have purchased this candy have resold it at large profits to retail dealers through whom it has found its way to the retail market. Upon examination these candy bars have been found to contain numerous live worms, bugs and worm dirt, and are filthy and contaminated. You inquire whether under the provisions of the Act of May 13, 1909, P. L. 520, United States Army officers may sell this candy by stating to the purchaser that it has been condemned by survey to be unfit for human consumption.

Your inquiry presents three questions:

(1). Whether the candy in question is "adulterated food" within the meaning of the Act cited.

(2). Whether adulterated food may be sold with a distinct notice to the purchaser that it is not fit for human consumption.

(3). Whether an officer or agent of the United States Government making such sales in pursuance of orders from his Department of the Federal Government may be prosecuted for violation of the Act cited.

(1). Section 2 of the Act of May 13, 1909, P. L. 520 provides:

"That the term 'food' as used in this Act shall include * *
* * * every article used for food by man * * and Section 3 of the Act provides:
* * *"

"That for the purpose of this Act an article of food shall be deemed adulterated, * * *"

"Sixth: If it consists of * * * a contaminated filthy or decomposed substance, either animal or vegetable."

That candy is a "food" within the meaning of that Act has been settled. Commonwealth vs. Pflaum, 236 Pa., 294. "Filthy" is defined as "foul, dirty, noisome, nasty," Century Dictionary; and "contaminated" is defined as "polluted, defiled, tainted, corrupt," Id. There can be no question that the candy bars which you describe were contaminated and filthy, and that they were "adulterated food" within the Statutory definition.

(2). May such adulterated food be sold if the purchaser be given distinct notice that it is not fit for human consumption?

"Pure food laws are enacted as a means of protecting the people against the fraud and imposition of manufacturers and venders of inferior and unwholesome food and medicinal products. Such Statutes are of great public interest, and should be so interpreted, if possible, within sound canons of construction, as to secure to the public the benefit intended by the Legislature." 11 Ruling Case Law 1101.

Of the particular Act under consideration, our Supreme Court in Commonwealth vs. Pflaum, 236 Pa., 294, said at P. 298:

"The Statute under consideration is a police regulation. It has to do with the public health, which is one of the chief objects of government and a proper subject of legislative control. The power of the legislature to promote the general welfare is extensive, and it may exercise a large discretion in determining how that power shall be employed. What the interests of the public require and what measures are necessary to protect them are subjects for the exercise of this discretion. Whether in a given instance the manufacture and sale of an article intended for human consumption is deleterious to health, and whether the public welfare demands that such business be prohibited, are questions of fact and policy exclusively for the determination of the legislature. It is an elementary proposition that all property in this State is held under the implied obligation that the owner shall not use it to the injury of the community."

Section I of the Act provides

"That it shall be unlawful for any person * * * to sell * * * any article of food which is adulterated * * *"

Under the plain words of this enactment, it is the sale which is interdicted, without regard to the motives or intent of the seller, the belief of the purchaser, or other circumstances attending the sale. I am of the opinion that this is precisely what the legislature intended.

If it had been intended to permit the sale of such food upon notice to the purchaser that it was adulterated, it would have said so. A reading of Section 5 indicates that the contracts for the sale of food from wholesalers to retailers were the subject of special consideration by the legislature. That section provides that a prosecution shall not be sustained against a retailer who has received from his vendor a guaranty that the food is not adulterated. If it had so intended the Legislature would have expressly provided that a prosecution should not be sustained against a vendor if he prove that he notified the vendee of the adulteration.

Again, if the Legislature had intended to permit the sale of such food under any circumstances it would doubtless have prescribed a method whereby the food should be denatured, as it did by the Act May 23, 1919, P. L. 267 relating to the sale of eggs unfit for food.

Furthermore, the protection of the public health against contagious diseases, is most easily and effectively accomplished if the center of contagion or distribution be restricted. If adulterated food may be sold at will, and the seller render himself immune from prosecution by stating to the purchaser that the food is adulterated, such food may be spread broadcast over the state, reach the stores of a thousand dealers, and be placed in the hands of ten thousand heedless and unsuspecting children. Not until the last sale in this commercial chain be made, could a prosecution be begun. To accomplish the purpose of the Act, the protection of the public health, a thousand investigations and as many prosecutions might be necessary. I am advised since the receipt of your inquiry that this is what has actually occurred in Philadelphia with the candy in question, and that a number of retail dealers have been prosecuted. The Legislature could not have been ignorant of the difficulties which would attend the enforcement of the Act if a seller were thus permitted to relieve himself from responsibility.

Considering the purpose of the Act, the evident intent of the Legislature and the plain words of the enactment, I am of the opinion that a sale of adulterated food is a violation of the Act, even though it be made with distinct notice to the purchaser that the food is adulterated.

(3). May an officer or agent of the United States Government, selling adulterated food in pursuance to the order of his Department of the Federal Government be prosecuted for a violation of this Act?

This must be answered in the negative.

It is a general rule that an officer of the United States Government, who in the strict performance of his official duty, does an act which constitutes a violation of the law of a State, is not punishable for the commission of such act.

This rule has been established and adhered to in a long line of decisions in the Federal Courts, of which the following are selected as illustrative of the varying circumstances under which it has been applied.

In re Thomas, 82 Fed. 304, the Governor of the Central Branch of the National Military Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Dayton, Ohio, served oleomargarine to the soldiers at that home without complying with the requirements of an Act passed May 16, 1894, entitled:

"An act to prevent fraud and deception in the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine and promote public health in the State of Ohio."

On petition to the Circuit Court of the United States for a writ of habeas corpus, the petitioner was discharged. Mr. Justice Taft, said p. 309:

"The jurisdiction of the State Government in such a case is excluded * * * * * because that which is being done is the business of the United States, and such business is as completely beyond the influence and control of the State Government as if it were not done within the territory of the State."

And on p. 310:

"No State can pass a law which shall in any manner interfere with or prevent the due exercise of its constitutional functions by the United States Government through its officers and agents."

On appeal the order of the Circuit Court was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals, 87 Fed. 453, and by the Supreme Court of the United States, 173 U. S. 276; 43 L. Ed. 699. That Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Peckham said (L. Ed. 701):

"The government is but claiming that its own officers, when discharging duties under Federal authority pursuant to and by virtue of valid Federal laws, are not subject to arrest or other liability under the laws of the State in which duties are performed * * * * *"

"We are of the opinion that the governor (of the Soldiers Home) was not subject to that law, and the Court had no jurisdiction to hear or determine the criminal prosecution in question, because the act complained of was performed as part of the duty of the governor as a Federal officer, in and by virtue of valid Federal authority, and in the performance of that duty he was not subject to the direction or control of the legislature of Ohio."

In re Waite 81 Fed. 359, an agent of the Federal pension department engaged in investigating pension frauds in the State of Iowa did an act which amounted to a violation of section 3871 of the Code of Iowa, which provides for the punishment of one who maliciously threatens to accuse a person of a crime in order to compel him to do an act against his will. He was tried in the State Court and upon error the Supreme Court of the State affirmed the judgment (State vs. Waite, 70 N. W. 596). Upon petition to the District Court of the United States for a writ of habeas corpus he was discharged. Upon error to the Circuit Court of Appeals (Campbell vs. Waite, 88 Fed. 102) this decision was affirmed. Mr. Justice Thayer, speaking for that Court said (pp. 106-7):

"It was also decided in re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 75, 10 Sup. Ct. 658 (34 L. Ed. 55,75), where most of the foregoing cases were cited and approved that no act done in pursuance of a law of the United States lawfully enacted can be an offense against the laws of a State, and that an act done in obedience to rules or regulations lawfully prescribed by one of the executive departments of the government or in obedience to the directions of one of the heads of such departments, acting within the scope of his authority, is to be regarded as an act done in pursuance of a law of the United States, although no Statute of the United States has in express terms directed the doing of the Act."

In Cunningham vs. Neagle, 135 U. S. 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55, Neagle, a special deputy marshal of the United States, while protecting Mr. Justice Field of the United States Supreme Court from a murderous assault by Judge Terry, shot and killed the latter. He was indicted for murder in the Court of San Joaquin County, California. Upon petition to the United States Circuit Court for writ of habeas corpus he was discharged, which action was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court. Upon the argument in the latter Court the Attorney General of California urged "that if the habeas corpus order can deliver the relator from prosecution under the laws of California, then it exempts him from all liability to trial anywhere." To this contention Mr. Justice Miller speaking for the Supreme Court said (p. 75):

"To the objection made in argument, that the prisoner is discharged by this writ from the power of the State Court to try him for the whole offense, the reply is, that if the prisoner is held in the State Court to answer for an act which he was authorized to do by the law of the United States, which it was his duty to do as a marshal of the United States, and if in doing that act he did no more than what was necessary and proper for him to do, he cannot be guilty of a crime under the law of California. When these things are shown, it is established that he is innocent of any crime against the laws of the State, or of any other authority whatever. There is no occasion for any further trial in the State Court, or in any Court."

To the same effect are Tennessee vs. Davis, 100 U. S. 257, 25 L. Ed. 648, where an internal revenue officer while engaged in the course of his official duty killed a man; in re Lewis, 83 Fed. 159, where a marshal was charged with robbery; in re Turner, 119 Fed. 231, where an army officer engaged in building a sewer for an army post was arrested for contempt in violating an injunction issued by a State Court; and Hunter vs. Wood, 209 U. S. 210, 52 L. Ed. 754, where a ticket agent, acting under authority of the order of a United States Court charged for a railroad ticket a rate in excess of the rate established by a State law.

It is true that where it is claimed by the officer that his act was performed in the course of his official duty, but it does not clearly appear that such was the fact, the United States Court may, in its discretion, refuse to discharge him upon habeas corpus and allow him to be tried in the State Court and to establish his claim to immunity before a jury in that Court. Such a case was Castle vs. Lewis, 254 Fed. 917. Without dismissing the facts of the law of this or other similar cases, it is sufficient to say that the facts which you present do not make such a case.

The Constitution of the United States, Article 1, Sec. 8, provides:

"The Congress shall have power * * * * * to declare war * * * * * to raise and support armies * * * * * to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces * * * * * and to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof."

Neither the power of Congress to authorize the purchase of supplies for the use of the army, nor the power to authorize the sale of supplies, can be doubted. Congress has enacted many laws in the exercise of these powers. Perhaps the most recent is the Act of July 9, 1918, c. 143, as amended by the Act of Feb. 25, 1919, c. 39, which authorized the President, through the head of any executive department to sell, upon such terms as he shall deem expedient, war supplies, etc. This power and authority existing, I must assume that the Army officers, concerning whose acts you inquire, were acting pursuant to it. It follows from what has been said that these officers are not answerable for their acts to the laws of the State of Pennsylvania.

I, therefore, advise you that officers or agents of the United States Government, selling adulterated candy in pursuance of orders from their Department of the Federal Government, are not liable to prosecution for violation of the Pure Food Act of May 13, 1909, P. L. 520, although the sales thus made by them would otherwise constitute a violation of the provisions of that Act.

I have written to you at some length believing that if the Department of the Federal Government which directed the sale of this candy be advised that the acts of its officers constitute a violation of the State law, and that prosecution is prevented solely because of the fact that the acts are done in pursuance of its order, it will arrange for the disposal of this candy in another manner or in another place.

Yours very truly,

GEORGE ROSS HULL,
Deputy Attorney General.

CONCERNING RETAIL PRICES.

The one thing which more than any other is responsible for the reduction in the volume of new buying is the general belief that prices have entered upon a long period of decline. While in the case of many commodities and manufactured articles this conclusion is somewhat hasty, nevertheless manufacturers and merchants generally feel the need of stabilizing of prices upon a lower level and one upon which buyers and sellers may base operations for a reasonable time into the future without fear of loss. One of the most significant and far-reaching instances of this tendency was the naming of lower prices by a number of important factors in the automobile industry, which action followed hard upon similar reductions instituted by prominent mail-order houses, by a large cotton manufacturer and by various concerns of lesser importance in other lines. This process of market stabilization has been going on for some time in the dry-goods, clothing and kindred lines, although as yet the interested retailers have relaxed little of their erstwhile cautiousness in buying. In fact retailers generally have been rather slow to follow the lead of the manufacturers and wholesalers in this respect. It is contended by the latter that unless retail prices are revised in accordance with the reductions at wholesale, public buying cannot be stimulated and the whole process of readjustment will have to be repeated.—National Bank of the Republic.—Cannery Notes.

OLEOMARGARINE, BUTTER AND OTHER EDIBLE FATS PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES.

For many years the production of margarin has been steadily increasing and the production of butter has been steadily decreasing or at a standstill in the United States. There has been very little change in the production of vegetable and animal fats and oils. The following figures have been secured from Federal government officials and reports:

LEGITIMATE BUSINESS UNHURT.

The elimination of the mushroom mercantile enterprises which rose up on the waves of speculation developed by the conditions growing out of the war, is causing unwarranted concern. The legitimate mercantile interests of the country are not being hurt, in reality they and the public are being benefited. Most of the failures now being reported are from among the concerns which grew up overnight in response to the opportunities presented by the war-concerns which had no part or place in the distributing machinery of the Country before the war-concerns whose development would have been impossible under normal conditions, and whose elimination, once the condition that produced them had passed, was as certain as the rising of the sun. If any of the old established merchandising houses should go down with the wreckage, they will suffer because they succumbed to temptation and let go their anchorages in sound business principles which saved, and will continue to save, the houses which are rooted firmly in the practices upon which the business superstructure rests. Nine times in ten the opportunist merchant is a profiteer and it is safe to assert that 99 per cent. of the prostitution charged to merchants in the last year arose out of the character of the competition brought into merchandising by these newcomers. The merchants who have survived are the merchants who adhered as closely to their principles as circumstances allowed, and they will go on serving the public in the future as they have in the past, and there is no reason whatever to regret the passing of those who may fail to measure up to the rigid standards of sound merchandising.

The old established merchants who have made merchandising what it is in America today need no apologists or eulogists. They are as well known to the average American as is his next-door neighbor, and the intelligent buyer knows that he is getting the best treatment the enlightened selfishness of the modern merchant has succeeded in devising. Many old patrons of the established houses doubtless found cause for dissatisfaction in the change in methods forced by the war conditions, but none discriminating enough to appreciate the really fine side of the relationship between the buyer and seller, which is characteristic, will allow the irritations of troubled times to delay a return to old allegiances now that the principal irritant has been removed.

Few of us fully appreciate just how much of a disturbing factor the mushroom merchant really was. Except for the fact that he did perform the function of passing goods on from the producer to the seller, he was not actually a merchant. Of course, he bought in the lowest market he could find and sold in the highest, and thereby justified the terms in which some still define a merchant; but the modern merchant who is in the business to stay does neither of these things, instead he buys with discrimination and sells at a price that will yield him a reasonable profit—the mushroom middleman was not a merchant in that sense. He was a plain opportunist who had the wit to see what was coming in the way of increased demand for goods and the money to go into the markets and bid against the established concerns, or he was a small trader who found himself shoved into what looked like success by the rushing tide of events and, generally speaking, lost his head in the process. In either case he was doomed to find his way back to the obscurity from which he came, little better off than he was before, but leaving wreck in his wake. It would be unfair to charge the mushroom trader with all the evils from whose aftermath we are suffering, but his responsibility is large, and it would be foolish to ignore it or to regret his elimination. The adjustments which in part he made necessary have perhaps not been completed, but they are well under way and there is every reason to hope for a speedy return to the methods if not to the price levels which prevailed before the war. A merchant owes a duty to the established order more important than that of any other of its functionaries, for he is nearest to the consumer and is in reality the agent of the consumer in his relations with the producer. The closer the merchant adheres to the interest of his principal and the better bargains he drives on his behalf, and the more restraint he exercises on his own, the better chance we have for stability and contentment.—American Exchange National Bank.—Cannery Notes.

"WHAT THE OTHER FELLOW SAYS."

The consumption of canned fruits and vegetables has not kept pace with the increased consumption of other grocery staples. In the case of canned tomatoes, for example, it has retrograded rather than advanced. In part this has been due to careless packing, but in the main, it is due to a fundamental economic fault. Canned foods of this sort have become too expensive for universal consumption.

We have frequently seen articles published by various canners presenting statistics showing the cost of packing canned foods. Nowhere have we seen an analysis of these figures made for the purpose of segregating the items of cost which are responsible for prying these foods from the class of everyday necessities.

Added costs due to high returns received by labor and agriculture cannot be said to have interfered with the normal growth of consumption, as the increased buying power represented should have more than take care of the increase in these two items of cost.

The freight increase need not be considered here as it is almost as general as the added cost due to inflated currency. We thus remove from further consideration raw materials, labor and freight. Let us now consider cans, cases, labels and machinery.

Tinplate has advanced from $3.10 to $7.00 per base box. This is the Steel Corporation's price, which is, we presume, a conservative one. Independent manufacturers are asking as much as $10.00 and $12.00. The supply of tinplate has been interfered with, first, by the steel strike, second, by the coal strike, and fourth, by the car shortage. This price seems to be based on supply and not on value. In the broadest view of the situation, this price is fundamentally wrong. It makes the tin can cost too much to be an economic food container.

The price of fibre cases is based on the cost per ton of chip board and jute lined board. Since April, 1918, the former has advanced from $30.00 to $115.00 and the latter from $65.00 to $185.00. The fibre cases, which have advanced in proportion, plus increased overhead, now costs more than it is worth, and one of three things must happen. Either it must come down in price or some other less expensive form of container must be developed, or the consumption of canned foods will be contracted. The costs of labels has increased over 250% and machinery has advanced over 100%. From the point of view of the canner, these costs are immutable; they are not like overhead charges, which can be reduced "per can" by quantity production.

If the makers of all these various commodities, and of all the materials that enter into them, are wise, they will move heaven and earth and sacrifice much in order to bring their share of canner's costs within the limit wherein he can produce an article that will go into really general consumption.—Campbell's Courant—Cannery Notes.

SERBS LEARN TO CAN.

There is a splendid opportunity for some enterprising Americans to establish canning factories in Serbia and teach the Serbs the process of canning and preserving as it is done in this country. For this is an industry which until last summer the Serbians knew nothing about.

American Red Cross workers, while in Serbia, taught the housewives to preserve fruits and vegetables. The scope of this work was limited by the lack of cans and jars, but in spite of the scarcity of containers many Serbian menus will boast green peas, tomatoes, asparagus and canned fruits with their bread and meat next winter. And once having tasted such delicacies out of the season, there will in the future be a ready market for them.

The only fruit which the Serbs have made any attempt to preserve heretofore have been the plums, great quantities of which are grown and exported. These are known as Bosian prunes and are noted for their excellence. A very good syrup called "pekmez" is made from these prunes and before the war great quantities of it were shipped all over the world especially to Austria and Germany.—Cannery Notes.

ANALYSIS OF FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

In another part of this number of the Bulletin appears the interesting and comprehensive report made by Carl F. Schoen, chemist, a member of the Scranton Laboratory Company, concerning the quality of 200 samples of flavoring extracts examined at the Scranton Chemical Laboratory during the year 1920. While the report may seem technical to the lay reader it can be said that it reveals a very gratifying state of affairs.

These analyses deal with flavoring extracts made by eighty-five manufacturers in Pennsylvania and in seven other states. As the report indicates the manufacturers have proved themselves observant, to a large extent of the laws of this Commonwealth. While some minor defects have been detected and are mentioned in the report, it is very gratifying to observe that the defects, as tested by the requirement of the law, were so trifling as to make prosecution not only unnecessary but actually improper.

Concerning thirty-six of these samples not even a technical complaint could be made. And of nineteen others it is remarked that they were labeled either "substitute" or "imitation" in such a manner as to render it out of the question for the most careless observer to be misled concerning the quality of the product. All along, as one perceives by this report, manufacturers of flavoring extracts are treating the state and the public fairly and are making an honest effort to fully inform their patrons and all others who are or should be interested.

This report not only shows increased obedience to law, but it also indicates the very considerable advance in business integrity among manufacturers of flavoring extracts and similar products. In days not so very far distant there was very much disregard for the public health and a great deal more carelessness both in the formulation and enforcement of law and in the moral and business standard of the average manufacturer. Thus we make progress along all lines.

Scranton, Pa., January 11, 1921.

Hon. James Foust, Director, Bureau of Foods, Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir: I beg to submit herewith the report of analyses of samples of flavoring extracts examined at the Scranton Chemical Laboratory during 1920. As this work was largely of an educational character, no prosecutions were recommended for no flagrant instances of adulteration or mis-branding were found. In many cases, technical charges of mis-branding in some minor particular might have been alleged, and these will be pointed out in the proper place.

The work covered the analysis of 200 samples of extract made by 85 different manufacturers in Pennsylvania and seven other states. A special examination for wood alcohol was also made and all samples were found to be free from this most dangerous chemical.

The results speak most highly for the condition of the extract trade.

In the following tabulation, the name of the sample, the dealer from whom purchased, the brand and manufacturer are set forth, as well as a discussion of the various samples as may be required.

DISCUSSION.

The following samples were sold and labeled Vanilla Extract and on examination were found to be as represented and therefore need no further comment: Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 8, 9, 12, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 25, 28, 31, 34, 35, 37, 40, 41, 43, 46, 47, 49, 50, 52, 54, 55, 58, 59, 60, 62, 68, 73.

Samples Nos. 3, 6, 16, 22, 26, 27, 30, 38, 42, 45, 48, 56, 64, 65, 66, 67, 70, 71, 72 were labeled either substitute or imitation in such a manner so that there could be no mistake as to the quality of the product.

No. 7—This sample, labeled Vanillin and Coumarin Flavoring, is in reality an imitation vanilla flavor. The label is a true statement regarding the ingredients of the product, yet its true significance may not be understood by the average purchaser.

No. 10—This sample was labeled substitute but the word substitute was in much smaller letters than the word vanilla.

No. 11—This sample was labeled concentrated vanilla flavor; examination does not show this extract to be of any higher flavoring value than the ordinary extract.

No. 13—This sample was labeled Vanilla Compound with the formula given. The word compound was in smaller letters than the word vanilla which is not overcome by the statement of the formula.

No. 14—This sample was labeled compound vanilla flavoring, with the formula given. The word compound was in smaller letters than the word vanilla.

No. 24—This sample was labeled Extract Vanilla Concentrated not ordinary. Analysis showed this extract to be ordinary vanilla extract and nothing more.

No. 29—This sample was labeled extract vanillin with coumarin; the remarks made regarding sample No. 7 apply to this sample.

No. 32—This sample was labeled Vanilla-Vanillin and Coumarin Flavor; the remarks made above apply to this sample.

No. 33—This sample was labeled Vanillin and Coumarin Flavor; same remarks as sample No. 7.

No. 36—This sample was labeled compound vanilla flavor. The formula was given showing Vanilla Bean .004 parts. This is in reality an imitation vanilla flavor and the small proportion of vanilla bean would add little of the quality of a true vanilla extract to the compound.

No. 39—This sample was labeled vanilla compound flavoring; only a small portion of vanilla bean could be detected; the remarks offered to sample No. 36 would also apply to this sample.

No. 44—This sample was labeled concentrated extract vanilla. This was found to be a high grade vanilla extract, but not found to be concentrated.

No. 51—This sample was labeled vanilla extract; in smaller letters "3-5 Standard Strength." Vanilla extract means an extract of definite strength and purity. The proper labeling of this sample would be "Diluted Vanilla Extract."

No. 53—This sample was properly labeled substitute on the bottle; on the carton the word substitute was obscure owing to shading.

No. 57—This sample was labeled Vanillin and Coumarin Flavor. The remarks applying to sample No. 7 apply to this sample also.

No. 61—Another Vanillin Coumarin, Vanilla Flavor.

No. 63—This sample was properly labeled substitute on the bottle; on the carton the word substitute was obscure owing to shading.

No. 69—Labeled Vanillin and Tonka Compound; same class as sample No. 7.

Samples Nos. 75, 78, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 91, 93, 94, 95, 99, 100, 102, 104 were found to be of proper strength and true to the label of Lemon extract.

Samples Nos. 74, 76, 77, 89, 90, 92, 97, 103 were properly labeled, "Substitute, Imitation or Artificial." In no case was there any obscurity in the labeling.

No. 79—This sample was labeled Oil of Lemon and Citral Flavor. This is a true statement of the composition of the product, yet the true significance of it might not be understood by the layman purchaser.

No. 96—This sample was labeled Lemon Flavor. It contained only a trace of oil of lemon; a proper labeling would have been terpeneless lemon extract or flavor.

Nos. 93, 101—These samples were labeled terpeneless extract of lemon—a true statement, but perhaps would not convey to the average purchaser the fact that a large portion of the oil of lemon was not present in the extract.

Samples Nos. 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118 were labeled extract of orange and found to be as represented.

No. 112 labeled Spirits of Orange met the requirements for extract of orange and was legal in every respect.

No. 119 labeled terpeneless oil of orange, a true statement. The remarks made in regard to samples Nos. 98 and 101 also apply to this sample.

Samples Nos. 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130 were found to have the required amount of oil of almond and to be free from nitro benzene and prussic acid.

No. 131—This sample was labeled Strawberry Extract on the carton and Imitation Strawberry Flavor on the bottle; if this sample were to be judged by the carton above it would be a clear mis-branding.

Nos. 132, 136—These samples were found to be as represented.

No. 113—On the carton this sample was labeled Strawberry; on the bottle Imitation Strawberry Extract. This is in the same class as sample No. 131.

Nos. 134, 137, 139, 140 were properly labeled imitation or artificial.

No. 135—On the carton this sample was labeled Artificial; on the bottle Imitation—the latter is perhaps more nearly correct.

No. 138—This sample was properly labeled artificial but the word was rather obscure on account of a shaded background.

Nos. 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150 were found to be legal.

No. 151—This sample was labeled artificial on the carton and imitation on the bottle. See No. 135.

No. 152—This sample was labeled artificial raspberry substitute—a novel, but true labeling.

Nos. 153, 154, 155, 157 were properly labeled either artificial or imitation.

Nos. 158, 160, 162, 163 were all labeled imitation or artificial, a proper labeling.

No. 159 was labeled Pineapple on the carton and on the bottle Imitation; remarks applying to No. 131 also apply to this sample.

No. 161—Pineapple extract was found to be legal.

Nos. 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169 were all properly labeled and legal.

No. 170—The label contained the following statement: "This extract has the true flavor of the ripe fruit." Interesting, if true.

Nos. 171, 172, 174 found to be true to label and legal.

No. 173 was labeled Compound Rose Extract, and contained a formula showing .2% oil of rose—a true statement. In this case the word compound was used to designate a dilute rose extract.

Nos. 175, 177 were properly labeled Imitation and Artificial.

No. 176 was true to label and legal.

Nos. 178, 179, 180 were labeled Imitation and Artificial.

No. 181 was properly labeled on front of the carton and bottle—"Imitation." On the side of the carton this statement was found: "Beware of Imitations" and on the back—"Made from the best article of natural fruits." Statements that do not coincide.

No. 182—This sample was labeled artificial on the carton and imitation on the bottle.

No. 183—This sample was properly labeled artificial, but the word artificial was in small letters not in conformity with the rest of the label.

Nos. 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 196 were miscellaneous spice extracts; all legal and true to label.

Nos. 195, 197, 199, 200 were miscellaneous imitation extracts whose nature is clearly shown by their labeling.

No. 198—The carton contained the following statement: "Contains no maple sugar syrup nor sap, but produces a flavor similar to maple."

CARL F. SCHOEN,
Chemist.

STATEMENT CONCERNING THE WORK OF THE BUREAU OF FOODS, PENNSYLVANIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The second year of the administration of Governor William C. Sproul broke all previous records in the Bureau of Foods, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture. The annual report for 1920 submitted to Secretary of Agriculture Fred Rasmussen by Director James Foust shows that over $600,000 was collected in license fees.

In 1907, the receipts of the Bureau amounted to $55,732, increasing each year by leaps and bounds until last year the total receipts were $626,472. The great bulk of the receipts came from oleomargarine licenses, cold storage licenses and other licenses granted by the Department, only a small amount coming from fines imposed under the pure food and drink acts.

With comparatively few exceptions the fines were imposed for local violations. The enforcement of the laws during the previous years had already brought about the breaking up of wholesale fraud and adulterations of staple prepared foodstuffs and the fines imposed in connection with this class of goods are negligible in number.

Commissioner Foust was first appointed to his present position by Governor Stuart in 1907. At that time 30 per cent. of all the prepared foodstuffs on the market was adulterated; now adulterations are rarely found and the prosecutions are chiefly directed against local violators selling such articles as ice cream, soft drinks, milk, vinegar, sausage and other meats and against cold storage products.

During 1920 samples collected by the agents and analyzed by the chemists of the Bureau totaled 7,722, while the grand total for fourteen years is 99,234. Cases terminated last year amounted to 1,033 and for twelve years 13,141.

During the first two years of Mr. Foust's administration the Bureau was not self-sustaining; now the receipts are more than six times the amount of the expenditures. The receipts are deposited with the State Treasurer for the use of the Commonwealth and the expenditures are provided for by appropriation.

The laws placed under the Director of the Bureau of Foods for enforcement are police regulations. The quality and quantity of food for eight millions of people are important and to keep the food pure and free from adulterations and to prevent misbranding is the work of the Director of the Bureau.

The following comparative statement, covering the year 1907 to 1920, inclusive, has been prepared:

Year	Samples Analyzed	Cases Terminated	Receipts	Expenditures
1907
1908	7,400	664	$55,732 63	$78,455 88
1909	8,300	300	54,580 02	69,968 20
1910	6,200	797	86,594 15	83,700 00
1911	5,594	667	110,802 95	79,661 65
1912	8,209	1,026	120,903 48	83,083 15
1913	7,204	1,049	136,125 49	81,858 55
1914	6,846	1,025	173,780 76	75,587 12
1915	4,827	1,010	225,010 78	73,271 41
1916	8,939	1,165	279,055 40	85,901 36
1917	5,807	1,093	303,367 03	77,931 97
1918	8,701	1,169	373,150 48	81,320 31
1919	6,643	1,133	488,855 12	81,586 31
1920	6,851	1,007	541,487 37	87,961 92
1920	7,722	1,033	626,472 25	102,284 45
Total	99,234	13,141	$3,576,917 51	$1,142,572 28

This table shows that the receipts for the year 1920, which are deposited with the State Treasurer for the use of the Commonwealth, were $524,187.80 in excess of the expenditures, which are provided for by a special appropriation.

THE BOTULINUS PERIL.

Careful investigation by competent chemists has made an end of the botulinus peril. Never at any time did a case appear in Pennsylvania. As soon as the mysterious deaths were reported the food bureau of this State immediately put a ban on olives and started the work of investigation. Other states joined in the matter and in a short time the cause of the virulent poison which had developed in a few cases was ascertained and the remedy suggested and applied. There is little likelihood that any trouble of this sort will recur, as ample precautions are now invariably taken.

INTENT OF OUR LAWS.

Every food law on the statute books of Pennsylvania was enacted for the specific purpose of protecting the consuming public from fraud. For that reason all adulteration is prohibited. Not only are injurious substances banned, but likewise other adulterants, harmless in themselves, but certain to diminish the food value of the product in which they are used. There is no harm in water; but when water is worked into butter in excess of the normal quantity and for the purpose of increasing the weight of the product it constitutes a fraud on the public and the manufacturer or vender who resorts to the practice is guilty of an offense under the law. The same is true when cheap foreign substances are added to sausage or any other product for the purpose of increasing the profits of the manufacturer or retailer. While the added product does not harm the consumer it does compel him to pay for something that does not actually belong to the article purchased and which materially reduces the original cost of the butter, sausage or other article which has been adulterated. The laws which punish such practices are just and right. It is not enough to keep dangerous adulterants out of the food of the people. When a housekeeper visits any business house in which food products or other articles of domestic utility or necessity are sold, she has a legal and a moral right to the exact article she believes herself to be purchasing. To adulterate food products even in the most harmless manner is to cheat the purchaser, and it is the duty of the state to punish the dishonest dealer even though the chief harm he does is confined to the pocket books of his patrons.

REPORT SHOWS BIG REDUCTION IN IMPORTED TEA REJECTIONS.

The rejections of tea offered for import were smaller for the last fiscal year than for any of the seven preceding years, according to the annual report of George F. Mitchell, Supervising Tea Examiner, United States Department of Agriculture. The total rejections amounted to only 145,246 pounds, of which 1,592 pounds were barred because of impurities chiefly due to artificial color. The remaining 143,654 pounds were not equal to the Government standards of quality.

The rejections amounted to only 0.15 per cent. of the 96,868,858 pounds of tea imported during the year. Although the amount imported was smaller than for any year since 1915, this does not, in the opinion of the Supervising Tea Examiner, necessarily indicate any decrease in consumption of tea in the United States. It is more likely due to the fact that during the war importations of tea were above normal in anticipation of possible embargoes or import duties on tea. Large quantities were carried over into 1920 from the previous year.

According to the report of the Tea Examiner, the low percentage of rejections for the year was due to several causes, the most important being that little, if any, teas that were intended for manufacturing purposes were entered for human consumption.

In former years, such teas were entered for human consumption with the hope that they would pass the Government inspection and thereby escape the 1 per cent. tax placed on teas for manufacturing purposes. It was estimated that 65 per cent. of the rejections for the fiscal year 1919 were teas that should have been entered for manufacturing purposes in the beginning, and that were so entered after having been rejected as unsuitable for human consumption.

The kinds of tea imported during the last fiscal year were as follows:

Green, 34,756,779 lbs.; Oolong, 15,390,546 lbs.; Black, 46,715,530 lbs.; total, 96,862,858 lbs.

The teas came from the following countries: Ceylon and India, 38,609,142 lbs.; China, 12,985,490 lbs.; Japan and Formosa, 39,134,952 lbs.; Dutch West Indies (Java and Sumatra), 6,133,274 lbs.

The report of the Supervising Examiner was issued by the Treasury Department, since the work was formerly performed under the supervision of that Department. On July 1, 1920, the Tea Inspection Service and the staff of tea examiners were transferred to the Department of Agriculture. Copies of the report of the Supervising Tea Examiner can be obtained upon application to the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

AN IMPORTANT OPINION.

CONCERNING THE LICENSING OF WAREHOUSES FROM WHICH OLEOMARGARINE IS SHIPPED.

The following opinion by Deputy Attorney General George Ross Hull, will be especially interesting to dealers in oleomargarine:

Hon. James Foust, Director of the Bureau of Foods, Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir: This Department is in receipt of your letter of recent date stating the following facts:

A wholesale dealer in oleomargarine carries stocks of that commodity in warehouses at Wilkes-Barre, Altoona and Philadelphia, Pa. His salesmen solicit orders which are forwarded to Philadelphia where they are accepted by him. He then directs the orders to be filled by shipments from the warehouses nearest to the point of destination. The warehouses at Altoona and Wilkes-Barre are maintained in order to expedite deliveries and reduce transportation charges, but no orders are accepted at these points. You ask whether this dealer is required to secure wholesale licenses for all of his warehouses, or whether a license for his place of business at Philadelphia is a sufficient compliance with the oleomargarine Act of May 29, 1901, P. L. 327, as amended by the Act of June 5, 1913, P. L. 412. These Acts provide as follows:

"That no person, firm or corporation shall * * * sell * * * oleomargarine * * * unless such person, firm or corporation shall have first obtained a license * * * as hereinafter provided."

"Every person, firm or corporation * * * desiring to * * * sell * * * oleomargarine * * * shall make application for a license so to do * * * which application shall contain an accurate description of the place where the proposed business is intended to be carried on."

"Such license shall not authorize the * * * sale of * * * oleomargarine * * * at any other place than that designated in the application and license."

The intent of the Legislature, as expressed in these provisions, is that any place where oleomargarine is sold shall be licensed in the manner provided by the Act. (Opinion of Deputy Attorney General Hargest, February 3, 1916, Official Opinions 1915-1916, page 497.)

The question you present is whether, under the facts stated, the sales take place in Philadelphia, where the orders are accepted by the dealer, or in Wilkes-Barre or Altoona, where the goods are set apart and marked for delivery to the purchaser, or to a common carrier for transportation to him.

A complete sale consists of several distinct acts, namely, (1) an offer to purchase; (2) an acceptance of the offer; (3) a transfer of property in the goods purchased, and (4) payment of the purchase price.

These several acts may be performed successively or contemporaneously. The first and last are the acts of the purchaser. The second and third are the acts of the seller. Upon acceptance of the offer the executory contract of sale is complete. Upon transfer of the property in the goods, the contract is executed by the seller, and upon payment of the purchase price is executed by the buyer. At what point does a "sale" take place, within the meaning of the oleomargarine Act of May 29, 1901?

The Act cited is a police regulation designed to protect the public health and to prevent fraud and imposition. The Legislature by its enactment intended to regulate and supervise the transfer of property in oleomargarine from vendor to vendee: i. e., the execution of the contract of sale by the vendor; and in my opinion the time when the sale takes place within the meaning of the Act is the time when the contract of sale is executed by the vendor.

In Garbrecht vs. Commonwealth, 96 Pa. 449, it appeared that a wholesale liquor dealer duly licensed to sell liquor in the city of Erie sent a salesman into Mercer County. The salesman secured orders for whiskey, mailed them to the dealer, who shipped the whiskey so ordered from his place of business at Erie to the purchasers by freight or express. The salesman having been indicted for selling liquor without a license in Mercer County, defended upon the ground that the sales took place at Erie. This contention was sustained by the Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Sterrett saying (page 452):

"The place of sale is the point at which goods ordered or purchased are set apart and delivered to the purchaser, or to a common carrier, who, for the purpose of delivery represents him."

This ruling was followed in Commonwealth vs. Fleming, 130 Pa. 138, and Commonwealth vs. Hess, 148 Pa. 48. See also Clohessy vs. Rodelheim, Bing & Co., 99 Pa. 56, Pearlman vs. Sartorius & Co., 162 Pa. 320, Braun & Fitts vs. Keady, 146 Pa. 519, Lowrey & Co. vs. Ulmer, 1 Super. Ct. 425.

In the case before you the goods while stored in the several warehouses are the property of the dealer, and a sale of them takes place at the warehouse where the goods ordered are set apart and delivered to the purchaser or to a common carrier who, for the purposes of delivery, represents him.

I advise you, therefore, that a dealer in oleomargarine having warehouses at Altoona, Wilkes-Barre and Philadelphia, who receives and accepts, at Philadelphia, all orders from his salesmen and then directs that the same be filled by setting apart and delivering to the several purchasers oleomargarine from the warehouse nearest the point of destination, is required, under the Act of May 29, 1901, P. L. 327, to have each such warehouse licensed.

Very truly yours,

GEO. ROSS HULL,
Deputy Attorney General.

MEAT HOLDINGS IN STORAGE.

QUARTERLY REPORT OF THE FOODS HELD IN THE SEVENTY-ONE COLD STORAGE WAREHOUSES IN PENNSYLVANIA, DECEMBER 31, 1920.

Meat holdings in storage warehouses in Pennsylvania exceed all previous records for this season of the year except in 1913, when large quantities were held for shipment to the American armies in France, according to James Foust, Director of the State Food Bureau. The amount of mutton and pork in storage are unprecedented, and the total meat holdings aggregate 7,597,490 pounds.

The number of eggs in storage is the smallest in the last eight years, although in the last three months 11,153,664 dozen have been moved from the storage warehouses of the State, leaving 961,944 dozen. Usually at this period of the year from 2,000,000 to 4,000,000 dozen eggs are held in storage, Director Foust said. Butter, poultry and fish supplies in storage are said to be about normal.

Mutton held in the storage warehouses totals 2,064,775 pounds, almost four times the usual supply. In 1918 the largest previous amount for this time of the year was 634,095 pounds. Pork holdings, which total of 3,174,266 pounds, reflect the drop in prices, as the supply on hand last year at this time was approximately 1,000,000 pounds. Approximately 1,500,000 pounds of pork was disposed of from the storage warehouses in the three months from September 30, which marked the beginning of the falling price era.

Philadelphia warehouses at the close of the year held 1,466,102 pounds of beef; 174,195 pounds of veal; 1,393,161 pounds of mutton; 2,150,542 pounds of pork; 407,130 dozen of eggs in shell; 565,231 pounds of eggs out of shell; 2,953,180 pounds of butter; 2,795,971 pounds of poultry; 1,485,454 pounds of fish, and 2,812 pounds of game.

HELPERS OF THE LAW.

There used to be a time in the history of Pennsylvania when its women took very little interest in public affairs. It was not the custom of the fair sex to obtrude themselves into affairs supposed to belong exclusively to the masculine sex. The woman who undertook to mix in affairs of state was stigmatized as strong-minded. It was the habit even of her own sex to look upon her with suspicion and aversion. She was thought to be unsexing herself. She was compared to a crowing hen. The ideal woman in those days was a notable housekeeper, but she suffered from many things and kept quiet.

The state had no pure food laws in those primitive times. They were not specially needed for the reason that each family generally put up its own food for the winter days and had its own garden, its own cow, its own pigs. Canned goods had obtained a very slight hold on the public taste. Housekeepers put up their own canned stuff. In the beginning they had the village tinner solder the lids on; later on they learned how to do that job themselves. They knew what they were getting. A few of the old-fashioned women still survive, but the majority now buy their canned goods in the groceries.

The changing conditions which have carried women very much to the front have brought many other new ideas to public view. We now have food laws in the nation and the state. Pennsylvania has an admirable code of laws dealing with the problem of food and drink. In the enforcement of the laws the women of the state have rendered wonderfully efficient service. This is especially true of the club women. They understand that there is strength in numbers and that by concerted action many marvelous things may be brought to pass. The Food Bureau of this Commonwealth is deeply in their debt. They have greatly aided in the proper enforcement of law and have likewise brought about a much better condition among both manufacturers and venders. A housekeeper who knows the law, understands the labels, is interested in pure food for all the people can do a great deal for pure food.

HOW THEY CAN BE HELPFUL.

The club women of Pennsylvania have been extremely useful in the work of enforcing the food laws because they are organized and can easily work in concert. The unorganized women, the housekeepers who are not members of any society which considers such problems as arouse the interest of the clubs must ordinarily work singly and for that reason are not apt to be as influential as their organized sisters. Nevertheless, they have been helpful in the past and may be so to an increasing degree throughout the coming months.

The housekeeper who must depend upon her own efforts for information about the quality of foodstuffs and about the requirements of laws regulating the manufacture and sale of food should acquaint herself with the general nature of the food laws of the Commonwealth and then should take special pains to study the labels on articles of food put up in containers of any sort and announcing on the container or other package covering and to acquaint herself with the meaning of those labels. Then she should insist upon pure products. She should be satisfied with no other.

When retail dealers discover that their regular customers are becoming particular about the brands on the food they purchase an effort will be made to gratify their desires. The retailer with communicate with the wholesaler or the manufacturer. He will insist upon obtaining the quality of goods desired by his patrons and will be satisfied with nothing less. The manufacturer will soon learn that it does not pay to furnish an inferior quality and he will presently do much better. As a rule the customer who insists upon getting a first class quality of goods and declines to be put off with any other sort succeeds in getting what he wants. Popular carelessness or positive ignorance is responsible for a great number of "cheap" and worthless food products.

MEETING OF CHEMISTS.

An important and interesting meeting of the chemists connected with the Bureau of Foods was held some days ago at the Harrisburg office. The discussions were of a very practical nature. Plans were laid for the future. It is the purpose of these valuable servants of the people to keep strictly on the job during the coming months.

OLEOMARGARINE LICENSES.

The indications at the moment of writing are that the number of licenses issued during 1921, authorizing the sale of oleomargarine will be somewhat in excess of those issued in 1920. During the past fifteen years there has been a tremendous increase in the licensed houses dealing with this product. Under the Pennsylvania law the consumer who desires pure butter is amply protected, while he who prefers oleomargarine also has ample opportunity to procure the desired article.

PROSECUTIONS DURING 1921.

Of course we hope the year will witness the fewest number of prosecutions in the history of the Food Bureau. It is not a pleasant thing for the Director of Foods or his agents to prosecute grocers or others for violation of the food laws. Quite the contrary. Prosecutions are only an incident of the Bureau's work from year to year and a regrettable incident. Nevertheless the laws must be enforced. Wise caterers to the food necessities of the public will be careful to inform themselves concerning the requirements of the food laws of the state and will take pains to comply therewith. Those who are careless or inattentive or wilful violators of law must not be too greatly aggrieved when they are compelled to meet justice face to face.

CONDITIONS ARE ENCOURAGING.

A majority of the persons charged with violations of the various food laws of the Commonwealth during 1920 fell from the straight and narrow way because of the phenomenal scarcity of sugar during a considerable part of the year. At times it was not only extravagantly high in price, but also almost impossible to procure in any quantity. So many manufactures of bottled goods fell by the wayside and employed saccharin as a substitute. This was in violation of the laws of Pennsylvania and the offenders were promptly obliged to realize that fact. Conditions are now such as to justify the hope that no such incident will occur again.
